POLK MAKES U. S. RULING

Future Submarine Cases to Be Dealt With on Their Own Merits.

Washington, July 15—The state department formally ruled today that the German submarine Deutschland is a merchant vessel and entitled to treatment as such.

In announcing the ruling, Acting Secretary Polk said it was not to be taken as a precedent and that any similar cases arising in the future would be dealt with on their own merits.

"In view of the facts in this particular case," said Mr. Polk, "there is no reason why the Deutschland should be considered a war vessel."

Based Upon Reports.

The department's action was based upon reports of navy customs officers who examined the submarine at Baltimore and found that she was unarmed and incapable of bearing converted for war-like purposes without extensive structural changes. An advisory report from the neutrality board, to which the case was referred informally by Mr. Polk, held that the vessel should be accorded all the privileges of a peaceful commerce carrier.

JOHN J. BERNET SUCCEEDS CANNIFF

Cleveland, Ohio, July 15.—The Nickel Plate railroad was reorganized by its new owners, O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen, here today.

President W. H. Caniff resigned, and John J. Bernet, vice president of the New York Central, was elected to succeed him.

Mr Bernet commenced work on the N. Y. C. lines in 1899 an dwas rapidly advanced, serving at different times as train dispatcher, trainmaster, superintendent, assistant general superintendent and assistant to the president, becoming vice president two years ago. He is forty-eight years old. W. H. Caniff, the retiring president, is sixty-eight years old and his railroad career dates from 1863, when he became a section hand and later a watchman on the Lake Shore road at Osseo, Mich. He came to the Nickel Plate as assistant general superintendent in 1889, was made general superintendent in 1892, general manager in 1896 and president in 1898.

DISPUTES IN POSTAL BILL YET UNSETTLED

Washington, July 15.—Details of the agreement on disputed points between house and senate in the postal bill which became available today show that the pneumatic tube contracts in large cities which the postoffice department wished to discontinue are to be extended to March 4, 1917, pending negotiations.

The long-standing row over payments to railroads for carrying mails and the manner of payment will be referred to the interstate commerce commission to determine whether the roads shall be paid on a space or weight basis and at what rate. Exxisting methods remain in effect meanwhile except on certain selected routes where the space system contended for by the railroads will be tested.

Publishers will have the right of appeal to federal courts from orders sending publications by freight, but the order will remain in effect in the meantime. More than a million dollars' difference in pay is involved.

SHOWERS STIMULATE BACK YARD CULTURE

Rains Bring New Hope to Amateur Gardeners Over City.

The rains during the past week were great for farmers. Both rural and city farmers. In the country the dashing showers and wind blew down the grain to some extent and injured the fruit trees, but they were considered as blessings after the parching draught. In the city, in the back yards of Fort Wayne, the hail punctured the yellow lettuce leaves and riddled the straggling stocks of yellow corn, but the rain brought back the flush of life to all the vegetables.

New interest is being taken in the back yard truck patches since the storms. Weeds are being pulled and the hoe is biting the earth again. Before the rains the white clay, which is prevalent in the rear lots of Fort Wayne, was like marble. Weeds broke off even with the ground instead of yielding to the sturdy pull. Vegetables and flowers began to look sickly.

Mrs. Josephine Nesbitt, head of the beautification department of the city, says she was surprised at the condition of gardens when she made a round over the city Friday and Saturday morning. City farmers have taken new hope and bumper crops are ahead. Above the vegetable life nods a wealth of flowers in most cases, Mrs. Nesbitt states.

CARPENTER HURT IN FALL FROM SCAFFOLD

Schagle fell when a board on the scaffold tipped with him. He was helping six other workmen who are remodeling the big house and building a garage. Schagle was working near the roof of the garage. He fell twelve feet and landed on his right side in the alley below. Workmen summoned the patrol. Schagle was removed to the Lutheran hospital where his injuries were cared for.

Turning in a card of 74, he beat James M. Barnes, of the White Marsh Valley, Pa., Country club, with 75, and Charles H. Hoffner, of the Philmont Country club, Hutington Valley, Pa., with 77. The three today played off an extra round to decide tie scores at the end of yesterday's play.

JUDGE SAUNDERSON EXPIRES AT FOWLER

Lafayette, Ind., July 15.—Judge James T. Saunderson, recognized throughout this part of Indiana as one of the leading members of the bar of the state, died at his home in Fowler, this morning, following a six weeks' illness of Uremic poisoning.

Judge Saunderson was 76 years old and was born in this state where he spent almost his entire life. He served during the civil war and on his return took up the reading of law in Monticello. In 1902 he was a candidate on the democratic ticket for the appellate judgeship but was defeated. He served six years as judge of the Benton-Warren circuit.

EMPLOYES GIVEN MEDALS.

Calumet, Mich., July 15.—Gold, silver and bronze medals were presented to 1,355 employes of the Calumet & Hecla Mining company here today as a reward for having served the company for from twenty to fifty years. All of the 5,500 employes were given a holiday with pay. Gov. Ferris, of Michigan, and Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, a director of the company, were principal speakers. A special train brought the Boston directors and employes here for the occasion.

THIRTY-FOUR DISHES OF ICE CREAM LON'S RECORD.

Alexandria, Ind., July 15.—The champion ice cream eater hails from Alexandria as far as all available records of ice cream show. Lon Markie, a farmer who pitches hay as easily as the city chap shoots pool, walked into a drug store here and remarked that he believed it would be nothing unusual for him to eat ten dishes of ice cream. Then he sat down and ate thirty-four dishes of ice cream of the usual size.

ATTACK UPON WOMAN FATAL

HE HAD BEEN LURED FROM HOME BY 'PHONE

St. Joseph, Mo., July 15.—Mrs. Oscar McDaniel, wife of the prosecuting attorney of Buchanan county, whose skull was crushed by an unidentified man at her home about midnight last night, died today without having regained consciousness.

Five shots were fired at her husband, who engaged in a revolver duel with the man, who escaped.

McDaniel recently has received letters threatening his life. The attack was carefully planned and the police connect it with an anonymous letter received by McDaniel about a week ago.

McDaniel was called down town by a telephone message about 11:30 p. m. The voice at the telephone said his brother was ill and he had taken him home. McDaniel drove in his car to the place designated but did not find his brother. He hurried home and as he stopped his car in front of the house a man opened fire on him from behind a tree. After his assailant fled the prosecutor went to his wife's room where he found her unconscious on the floor, her head badly crushed. Bloodhounds are being used in an effort to track the assailant.

NEW YORK EPIDEMIC SHOWS NO ABATEMENT

27 Deaths and 144 New Cases of Infantile Paralysis for 24 Hours.

New York, July 15.—A marked drop in temperature failed today materially to reduce the fatalities or development of the epidemic of infantile paralysis. During the twenty-four hours ending at 10 o'clock this morning there were 27 deaths and 144 new cases of the disease reported in the five boroughs of New York city.

To control the epidemic, which has been felt in all parts of the country, the Rockefeller foundation today donated the sum of $50,000 to those in charge of the fight against the disease. Mayor Mitchell has been named a member of the committee through which the fund will be disbursed.

Since the epidemic started on June 26, nineteen days ago, 1,853 cases have been reported and there have been 369 deaths.

NAVAL MILITIA ON PRACTICE CRUISE

About 270 officers and 4,200 militiamen were engaged, in addition to a somewhat smaller number of regular naval officers and enlisted men.

BROUGHT ASHORE AT CHARLESTON

Ship Has Broken in Two and Will Undoubtedly Be Total Loss.

Charleston, S. C., July 15.—All the 142 men who abandoned the large naval collier, Hector, when she grounded last night, are safe, Captain Bryan, of the Charleston naval yard, announced early today.

One hundred and two marines and sailors from the Hector were landed here this morning. Capt. Newell and 16 men remain aboard the Hector, which is lying aground off Charleston light ship broken in two. Four injured marines were sent to a local hospital.

The Hector, commanded by Captain Joseph Newell, had sailed from Port Royal, S. C., naval training station, carrying sixty marines to Santo Domingo, when she was partially disabled in Friday's hurricane. She grounded while trying to make Charleston harbor, convoyed by the steamer Alamo. High seas had prevented the attempt of getting close enough to take off the men, who took to their small boats. In addition to her commander and the marines, the Hector, which displaced 11,200 tons, carried eleven officers and a crew of seventy men.

Health Department Heads Decry Use of Rivers as Dumping Place.

"If it is a fact that the fish killed in the St. Mary's river Friday, died because the water was poisoned by sewage, the river water must be in bad condition," Dr. Gilpin, secretary o fthe health board, said Saturday.

"If the water is poisoned enough to kill even carp, it is hardly fit to wind near Fort Wayne homes. It brings up the question of allowing everything to be dumped into the river, which flows through the city.

"Every year the health board mentions in it sannual report the poor sewage system of the city. Sewers of all kinds pour their filth into the river. It is always worse in summer. There may be little danger from plague but it might cause disease for children, who make much use of the cooling stream.

"A sewage farm might not be considered as practical now, but if the city continues to grow and the sewage increases in abundance, a plan to keep waste from the river must follow. To place the sewage system of Fort Wayne on an absolutely sanitary basis would cost a mililon dollars."

GERMANS FORCED BACK TO THIRD LINE OF DEFENSES

DEAD FLIES NOW DOWN TO TEN CENTS PINT AT PERU.

Peru, Ind., July 15.—The Anti-Tuberculosis society here started a fly swatting campaign yesterday by offering 20 cents a hundred for dead flies—and the society nearly was bankrupt at the end of the day. All the children in town, it seemed, reported with dead flies and before evening it was announced that the price had been reduced to ten cents a pint. One little girl brought in 1,600 dead flies and received $2 for a half day's work.

STORM DOES MUCH DAMAGE

Damage done in Fort Wayne by the storm Friday afternoon will run into the thousands of dollars. There can be no accurate estimate, although $75,000 is believed to be conservative. Thousands of dollars worth of goods stored in downtown basements that were flooded were either ruined or badly damaged.

The storm did the most serious damage at the garage of A. J. Rose and company on the northeast corner of Superior and Calhoun, in the building formerly occupied by the Boss Manufacturing company. The structure was unable to withstand the fury of the gale, causing it to collapse. Contrary to first impression, the building was not struck by lightning, but it is now believed that the weight of the water, which could not be carried off, caused the roof to give way, crashing through to the first floor.

Just a few minutes before the crash came, A. J. Rose, with four men, John Herrman, 3932 Arlington avenue; Lawrence Sunderlin, Milford Frankenstein and Herbert Smith were working on the second floor. They heard the roof and walls crack and give and Rose ordered

JOINT COMMISSION NOW SEEMS LIKELY

Washington, D. C., July 15.—Solution of difficulties between the United States and Mexico appeared today to trend more and more towards settlement through an international joint commission. Informal conferences between Acting Secretary of State Polk and Eliseo Arredondo, Mexican ambassador, it was indicated, were developing questions for probable submission to such a body.

General Carranza is said to approve the commission plan of settling differences as provided in the treaty of 1848 and state department officials are believed to be willing to let negotiations take this course, though preferring that adjustment be made through the present conference. President Wilson it is understood, is not dissatisfied with the direction negotiations are taking.

AMERICAN IS FINED BY GERMAN MILITARY

London, July 15—(12:15 p. m.)—Major R. M. Dutton, United States marine, retired, who is attached to the American Commission for the Relief of Belgium, was fined 500 marks recently by a German military tribunal in Brussels.

A press despatch received here says the nature of Major Dutton's offense is not known, but that the fine was imposed for "disrespectful conduct" toward a German officer. At the office of the Belgian commission here, it was stated Major Dutton was fined after his automobile had

STENOGRAPHER WILL RETURN TO TESTIFY

Muncie, Ind., July 15.—Miss Harriet Williams, stenographer for Gene Williams, formerly deputy prosecuting attorney, who recently was convicted here and sentenced to prison for bribery, is expected to testify for the defense in the trial of Mayor Rollin H. Bunch, charged with soliciting and accepting bribes.

It was learned today that Miss Williams, who is in Dayton, where she went before the Williams trial began, has been served with a subpoena and has consented to return and testify. Attorneys for the state said they would be content with cross examining her and would not use her as a state's witness.

Mrs. Viola Gossett, who runs a rooming house here, was the first witness at today's session. She testified that in July, 1914, she was called to the office of Williams, and she quoted him as having said: "We have too many rooming houses in Muncie, and we are going to assess them $5 to $25 a week. We are going to assess you $5 a week. Now you understand that neither Roll (the mayor) Frank Mann (prosecutor) nor I get any of this—it's for campaign purposes."

She said she could not pay the alleged assessment.

She denied selling beer at her home, but said she had served it to Williams and Lloyd Tont several times when they called. She denied ever having paid them graft money. Her residence was raided twice by the police and once she was accused of contributing to the delinquency of a girl. She said she never met the mayor.

CALL INSTRUCTIONS COMMAND TO ACQUIT

Waukegan, Ill., July 15.—The case of Will H. Orpet, University of Wisconsin student, charged with the murder of Marion Lambert, was given to the jury this afternoon.

Counsel for the defendant said that Judge Donnelly's instructions to the jury were tantamount to a command to the jury to acquit.

There is believed to be a possibility that Orpet may knew his fate by nightfall. David R. Joslyn, special prosecutor, completed his final argument in the case shortly before Judge Donnelly began to give his instructions.

WIFE TO ACCOMPANY MR. HUGHES ON TRIP

Bridgehampton, N. Y., July 15.—Charles E. Hughes announced today that Mrs. Hughes would accompany him on his campaign trip to the Pacific coast next month. Mrs. Hughes will also join her husband in his fortnight of outdoor life and mountain climbing, having accompanied her husband frequently in Switzerland and climbed with him to the summit of the Alpine peaks.

The nominee expects to make the political part of his trip a purely business affair and to that end has decided to decline all social invitations on the trip. He will travel probably in a private car which will be attached to regular trains and at the chief cities where he will speak and stop over night at hotels. Miss Frances Keller, chairman of the woman's national committee of the Hughes alliance, was a luncheon guest today at the nominee's summer home.

MORE GAINS FOR BRITISH

BERLIN ADMITS SOME REVERSES

Says Foe Has Gained Territory Where Fighting is Still in Progress.

Today's War News Given in Summary

This marks a British advance of four miles from the original German lines as they existed at the beginning of the offensive on July 1 in the Mametz sector. The force of the renewed British drive is shown not only in the ground gained but in the number of prisoners captured. London reports the taking of more than 2,000 Germans within the past twenty-four hours, the total since the start of the offensive now being in excess of 10,000.

While the British are thus pushing back the Teutonic lines, the French on their right flank are remaining comparatively inactive, having already achieved a similar object. They are busy at Verdun, however, where they have repulsed an attack near the Avocourt redoubt, on the extreme left of the Verdun front, while their artillery is actively replying to bombardments by the crown prince's guns on the east bank of the Meuse.

At Apremont attempted German attacks were broken up by the French fire. Hard fighting continues between Russians and Turks in Turkish Armenia where the Russians are pushing westward from Mamakahatun. The result of the battle so far is indecisive, Constantinople reports.

London, July 15.—(2:58 p. m.)—The British offensive was resumed today. The war office announced that at one point the Germans were forced back to their third line positions. More than 2,000 prisoners were taken.

VIOLENT ARTILLERY DUEL.

Paris, July 15.—A violent artillery duel continues in the Flurey sector, the war office announced today. A German attack on a trench northeast of the Avocourt redoubt was repulsed, the official statement asserts, and German attempts to undertake attacks in the Apremont forest were checked by a curtain of fire.

TENSION GROWS GREATER.

Rome, July 15.—(Via Paris, 1:45 p. m.)—A strong demand has arisen in the press and among the public for cancellation of the agreement between Italy and Germany, whereby the rights of citizens of each country within the others domain to be respected, violation of the agreement by Germany be-

YOUTH WHO ENTERED HOUSE IS BOUND OVER

Said He Was Drunk and Believed He Was Getting Into Own Room.

William Shiedler, 18, whose parents live in Mishawaka, was bound over to the circuit court under $1,000 bond from municipal court Saturday morning after he had admitted entering the home of John Woich, 2011 John street, Thursday night.

Shiedler said he was intoxicated and thought he was climbing through the back window of his rooming house and into his room. He was afraid to go home drunk, he said, and arouse the landlady. He admitted having been arrested on a similar charge in Lagrange, some time ago. He served one week in jail for the offense, he said.

Mrs. Woich told that she was awakened when Shiedler held a lighted match near her face, when she was sleeping in the rear room. She screamed for help. Her husband and son ran into the room and caught hold of Shiedler. The youth begged to be allowed to go, she told. She called the police while the men held Shiedler.

William Klomp, real estate dealer, acted as interpreter for Mrs. Woich and her daughter, who are Polish. Officer Young said that Shiedler told him he was investigating at the house and was doing special police duty. Judge Kerr will have Shiedler examined by a physician while in the county jail as the judge thinks he may be mentally deranged.

One Prisoner in Hospital.

Remi Menjoro, 35, could not be tried on a drunk charge Saturday morning because he is in the St. Joseph hospital suffering from a fractured skull. Menjoro was injured when he attempted to get up after falling from an express truck at the interurban station. He struck his head on a bolt when rising.

Patrolman Amos said he saw Menjoro roll from the truck and realizing that the man was intoxicated, started towards him. The Italian hurried to get up and hit his head. He was rendered groggy. Menjoro was removed to the hospital, where a slight fracture was discovered. His trial is set for July 22. He is held under $25 bond.

Jack Gehler, who gave his home as Huntington, and Al Sennido, who has been working near Decatur, companions of Menjoro, who were also lounging about the interurban station in a drunken condition, were fined $1 and costs each.

The case against Frank Fordham, machinist, 2213 Weisser Park avenue, was continued until July 31. Fordham had been in court some time ago on the same charge of child neglect. He told the court he had been doing better since that time and would try and provide for his family in the future.

George Ghent, farmer living eight miles north of the city and father of Mrs. Fordham, urged Judge Kerr to fine Fordham.

"It is no use," Ghent told Kerr. "We have tried him so many times. He will not be good."

Mrs. Fordham did not want her husband sent to jail. He is all right when sober, she claimed. The husband must pay his wife $8 a week from his wages or go to jail, Kerr ordered. The wife is to report to the court.

Other Police Court Cases.

Trial of Henry Havert, charged with child neglect, was continued indefinitely.

Pat Boba, tramp printer, was fined $5 and costs after being convicted on a drunk charge. He had been arrested by Police Chief Lenz, who said he gave the man a chance to go home and go to bed but later found the fellow in a saloon.

"The chief of police or nobody else has a right to tell me when to go to bed," Boba argued to the court.

John Sullivan, 72 years old, who says he has been working as a gardener in Churubusco, was fined $1 and costs after being convicted on a drunk charge. He is gray and broken by the years and he wept when told that he must go to jail.

Richard McVey, of Auburn, was fined $5 and costs after pleading guilty to a charge of public intoxication. Case of Dan Driskell, charged with being drunk, was continued until Monday. Bruno Stasekk, charged with loitering, will be tried Tuesday. He is held under $25 bond.

After Session of Court.

An after session of court was held to dispose of the case of Elmer Des Garden, Russian, charged with vagrancy. Des Garden had been arrested out on Wayne trace shortly after court adjourned.

The patrol had answered the call to Edsall avenue, where it was said a man was begging. The policemen met Des Garden on the way out. They stopped and talked with him. He told a story of being a laboring man. Police went on to Edsall avenue, where they were directed to return and arrest Des Garden. He pleaded not guilty to the vagrandy charge and will be tried Monday.

the men to leave. They were no sooner out of danger than the building collapsed. Three automobiles in the garage were badly damaged.

Lightning Plays Havoc.

The lightning played havoc and all sorts of pranks in every section of the city, the northern and eastern sections of the city, however, being hit the hardest. Many houses, barns and trees were struck. According to Weather Observer P. McDonough, there was a total of 2.28 inches of precipitation, which was the heaviest in years. A total of 2.26 inches fell between 2:22 p. m. and 3 p. m., and of this .85 of an inch fell from 2:40 p. m. to 2:45 p. m. The greatest 24-hour amount on record is 4.78 inches, August 26, 1899.

Water in Subways.

The catch basins and sewers being unable to carry off the water caused a miniature river under the viaducts at Calhoun, Fairfield and Broadway, blocking all street car traffic. About three feet of water was in the Calhoun street subway. As a matter of fact the water rushed down Calhoun street at a maddening pace, filling store rooms and basements for several blocks.

Fire Department Busy.

During the storm the fire department was kept on the jump, every piece of fire apparatus with the exception of No. 2 company, being kept busy answering calls in different sections of the city. An alarm came in about 2:15 o'clock when lightning struck the barn of F. Arter, along the St. Mary's river, between Pape avenue and Herman street. Mr. Arter, who is an excavating contractor, keeps twelve teams of horses and as many wagons in the barn, but fortunately they were all out Friday afternoon. The structure was almost totally destroyed. Mrs. E. Arter, 522 West Superior street, who owned the building, estimates the loss at $1,500, which, however, is covered by insurance.

Other alarms came from 506 Buchanan street, 1312 South Calhoun street and 2404 North Clinton street. A bad blaze was threatened at 1312 Calhoun street, when lightning followed a wire into the basement of the Blattner Furniture company's store, creating some pyrotechnics that for a time looked serious. At 2404 North Clinton street the residence of Harry Wenard was struck and caught fire, which, however, was extinguished before any great damage was done.

At the Crematory.

The terrific wind blew down the steel smoke stack on the municipal garbage plant on North Clinton street, demolishing it and causing damage estimated at $300. Part of the slate roof was also blown off. The board of works immediately ordered a new stack. The plant will not be shut down.

More than 1,200 telephones were put out of commission. Considerable damage was done at the federal building, where the pipes leading from the roof to the ground filled up, being unable to carry off the water, resulting in the flooding of the mailing room.

Harmar Stack Hit.

The large brick smoke stack on the new Harmar school was struck by lightning, tearing a hole into it several feet long. Bricks were hurled in every direction. Lightning also struck the high steeple on the Trinity English Lutheran church and a corner of the Hope hospital, doing slight damage. Chimneys were struck on the home of Henry Baade, on Broadway, and Levi A. Todd, 614 West Fourth street.

Big Barn Burns.

The large barn on the farm of Charles Hoffmayer, four and one-half miles northeast of the city, on the Leesburg road, was burned to the ground as result of being struck by lightning. Much newly made hay was damaged. The loss is estimated at $1,500.

Two trees standing in front of the residence of Manning Smith, 1015 East Wayne street, were struck by lightning. One of them was blown down, falling on Mr. Smith's house. Water filled the basements of the News, Journal-Gazette and Freie-Presse, damaging much white paper.

Farmer Knocked Down.

John Poor, a farmer residing just north of Etna Green, in Kosciusko county, was knocked down as he was leading a horse in the barnyard at his home. He was unconscious for some little time. The horse suffered the same experience.

Blackford County Boy Killed.

Jesse Needler, 9 years old, son of Mrs. Ada Needler, seven miles northwest of Hartford City, was struck and killed instantly by lightning Friday afternoon. A hole was burned through his body. The boy was in a field after cattle when he met his death.

Many Lights Out.

Many lights were out until a late hour Friday night in Fort Wayne, some sections of the city being in total darkness until after 10 o'clock. Railroad men say the storm was local. A roof was blown from the Central foundry, taking with it several wires of the Nickel Plate railroad, the only damage suffered by this road.

Streets Are Littered.

City Forester Getz was besieged by telephone calls asking him to see that limbs which had been blown from trees by the storm Friday be removed from sidewalks and streets. Police were also called several times and notified that trees had fallen across streets and in a few cases blocked traffic completely.

Forester Getz secured services of two wagons from the board of works and had the fallen limbs removed. Nearly every street in the city was partly filled with shattered limbs, he said. In some cases whole trees were down. Many trees in the city parks suffered. The great maple trees of the city suffered most, Getz believes.

Four men injured among the 102 brought here are Chief Engineer E. A. Mercer, skull fractured; T. Christ, carpenter, broken leg and knee cap; Fireman McDermod, skull fractured and body burned; Oiler Singleton, leg broken.

The destroyer Terry arrived this morning badly battered by rough weather. She was in tow of the Relief, which had brought her from Santo Domingo, where she had been aground.

SHIP WILL BE TOTAL LOSS.

Abandoned in Early Morning Seven Miles Off Cape Romaine.

Washington, July 15.—Admiral Benson, chief of operations of the navy department, announced this morning he had received dispatches from Charleston saying the marines and crew of the Hector all were saved. Part of the rescued men were landed at the Charleston navy yard and the remainder are aboard vessels in Charleston harbor, he said.

Navy department radiogram from Charleston says the Hector was abandoned at 12:45 o'clock this morning seven miles northeast of Cape Romaine. The vessel will be a total loss as she is broken in two. All hands, the dispatch says, were saved and were brought ashore aboard the lighthouse tender Cypress and the naval tug Wilmington. There were twelve officers and seventy men of the crew in addition to one officer and fifty-six marine recruits from Norfolk and Port Royal, S. C. The master of the Hector is G. F. Newell.

Commandant Bryan, of the Charleston yard, sent the following message to the navy department: "Hector ashore seven miles northeast of the Romaine gas buoy. Abandoned by crew at 12:45 a. m. Ship broken in two and a total wreck. All hands saved. Chief engineer and one fireman seriously injured. Carpenter broken leg. Officers and crew were being taken to Charleston."

have made representations to the state department, urging that the Deutschland was a potential warship, subject to internment if she remained in a neutral port more than the time allowed by international law.

Now that the status of the vessel has been fixed so far as the American government is concerned, every possible effort will be made to prevent news of her movements in territorial waters of the United States from reaching the allied warships, which may be waiting off the Virginia coast to intercept her when she starts back to Germany.

"ANOTHER COLORADO," SAY LABOR LEADERS OF STRIKE IN THE NORTHERN IRON BELT.

Striking miners and their wives giving money, donated by miners, to Mrs. John Allers, who was widowed and whose children were orphaned when her husband, a miner, was killed in a clash between strikers and men opposing them.

Duluth, Minn., July 14.—Four men have been killed in clashes between striking miners and deputy sheriffs on the iron ridge near this city, where capital and labor are drawn up in battle formation and labor leaders say the strike will be bigger than the Colorado strike of 1913!

They claim the Minnesota branch of the United States steel corporation is even more bitterly opposed to organized labor than were the capitalists of Colorado.

Deputy sheriffs are protecting the property of the steel corporation.

The strikers are armed and Gov. Burnquist has ordered the sheriff of St. Louis county to "arrest forthwith and take before magistrates, preferably at Duluth, all persons who have participated or are participating in riots."

The steel trust, according to labor leaders, is fighting the strikers "with gunmen, detectives, courts and press."

The miners—about 17,000—are demanding $2.75 a day for "top men"; $3 a day for miners in dry places; $3.50 a day for miners in wet place; an 8-hour day, abolition of contract labor, bimonthly pay days, and immediate pay when discharged or quitting.

Strikers say miners in Arizona and Montana are receiving $4.50 a day; that laborers in Butte are getting $4.50 a day, and harvesters everywhere are being paid $4 a day.

In a "declaration of war" issued by the striking miners, it is claimed that:

The three labor leaders who were arrested have been charged with murder. They had been arrested three times before but had been bailed out by friends. The murder charge was made, labor men declare, so as to hold the leaders in jail.

The funeral of the miner, John Allers, was the occasion of a big labor demonstration. The striking miners carried a huge banner in the funeral procession inscribed, "Murdered by Oliver Gunmen."

The Minnesota national guard is now out of state control on account of the Mexican situation, but the naval militia is available, and it is said, might be called to the iron range to establish military law.

MAIL ROUTES GIVE MORE SERVICE NOW

Changes have been ordered in rural routes out of Fort Wayne and E. C. Miller, postmaster, has announced the following advices from Washington.

To route No. 1, one and three-fourth miles east on the Till road, one-half mile north on the Coldwater road, one and three-fourth miles west on the Du Pont road, and one-fourth mile south on the Lima road, are to be added.

From route No. 1, one-half mile east, one-half mile north, making a total added to route No. 1, of two and a half miles, and a total taken from the route of two miles. This route will now be 27.2 miles long.

Serves More Families.

Six families additional will be served on Route No. 1 on the Till road and the same number of families will get service anew on the Du Pount road. One mile is added to Route No. 2, and the route will be 25.9 miles long.

One-half mile is added to the east on route No. 3, out of Huntertown. The route is 25 miles long.

It has been the effort of Mr. Miller to effect the changes in routes for some time in order that more families could be served. The postoffice department has thus brought them about.

ing alleged. The situation is such that the relations of Italy and Germany seem to have reached a greater tension than at any time since the war began. Before leaving Rome in the spring of 1915, Prince von Buelow, then German ambassador to Italy, concluded an agreement with the Italian government under which, in case of war between Austria and Italy, Germany and Italy pledged themselves to respect the properties and lives of their respective subjects. This meant for Germany a guarantee of several million dollars worth of properties in Italy held by her subjects, and for Italy the safety of 30,000 of her citizens still living in Germany.

The Berlin Bankers association, according to the Stefani news agency, has circularized all banks in Germany, instructing them that henceforth, by request of the imperial foreign office, Italians are to be treated as subjects of a belligerent state, in other words that payments to Italians in Germany are to be stopped.

The German foreign office has officially informed the Italian government, through the Swiss government, that payment of workingmen's pension, due Italians, had been suspended.

HAY IS NEW JUDGE OF CLAIMS COURT

Virginia Congressman the President's Choice for Bench.

Washington, July 15.—President Wilson today appointed Representative James J. Hay, of Madison, Va., chairman of the house military affairs committee, for judge of the United States court of claims, to succeed Judge George W. Atkinson, who retired for age.

Mr. Hay has represented the Seventh Virginia district in congress for twenty years and since his youth has been a leader in Virginia politics.

He has been the foremost champion of the national guard as the nation's main reliance for defense and to him more than any one man in congress was due the defeat of former Secretary Garrison's plan for organizing a federal continental volunteer army as a reserve behind the regulars. He always has opposed a large regular army but agreed to a considerable increase in the army reorganibation bill originally reported by his committee, and to the vastly larger increase to which the house and senate committee compromised.

The court of claims judgship is a life office with a salary of $6,000 a year, and after ten years' service the holder may retire on full pay. Mr. Hay is now about 65 years old.

The nomination came as a surprise as Representative Hay's name had not been mentioned among the numerous applicants. His coleagues believe confirmation will be voted promptly by the senate.

Representative S. H. Dent, of Alabama, ranking democratic member, automatically will become chairman of the military committee for the remainder of the session upon Mr. Hay's retirement.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

NEWS OF FORT WAYNE'S NEIGHBORS

HUNTINGTON PRIEST DEAD

Huntington, Ind., July 15.—Rev. W. C. Miller, 59, pastor for the past ten years of the SS. Peter and Paul's Catholic church in Huntington, died Friday. He had been ill three weeks. Funeral services will be conducted Monday morning at 10 o'clock. Father Noll will officiate and Bishop Alerding will be in attendance.

Father Miller was born in Germany. He was ordained as a priest in 1881 by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Dwenger, of Fort Wayne. He was placed at the head of the churches in the Nix settlement and Roanoke. He was then transferred to Kentland. Later he came to be head of the Huntington church.

NOBLE COUNTY MAN DROPS DEAD.

Columbia City, Ind., July 15.—Dr. Otto Grisier, of this city, received a call from the Andrew Ennen home in Noble county to hurry to the Ennen farm on account of the serious sickness of Mr. Ennen who had fallen over as he was mowing some weeds near the barn lot. He made a flying trip but when he arrived there he found Mr. Ennen dead. Death apparently had been instantaneous. Mr. Ennen has been in the best of health recently and on Thursday ate his meals as usual. During the afternoon he visited with members of his family and sang a few German songs as they sat on the porch together.

CRIPPLED FOR LIFE.

Auburn, Ind., July 15.—Although the little Garrett child suffering from that dreaded disease, infantile paralysis, may recover, it is almost certain that she will be a cripple for life. The fourteen-months-old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. G. Bloedel was slightly improved today, the attending physician reports, and it is his opinion that she will probably recover, but he is not yet prepared to say that she is at all out of danger. Another probability is that the disease in the form afflicting the Bloedel child is not contagious and that no other cases will develop from it. However, there is no certainty of this and a close quarantine is being maintained over the Garrett home.

MUST FACE SERIOUS CHARGE.

Warsaw, Ind., July 15.—Grant Richardson, of Pierceton, is wanted on a charge of assault an dbattery with intent to kill. The papers were filed by his daughter. Before the Pierceton officers could arrive at that place he had left and his whereabouts at the present time are unknown. Richardson is said to have been drinking for several days and when sobering up was in an ugly mood. He made an attack upon one of the members of his family and is said to have made the threat to kill.

The accident was witnessed by the other members of the section gang. They hurriedly loaded the injured man on the section handcar and rushed him to the Pennsylvania freight station. Dr. Dodds was called. After receiving first aid, Burris was removed to his home in East Franklin street.

MARRIED IN BED; HAD BROKEN LEG.

Van Wert, Ohio, July 15.—Fate could not keep Elmer Speelman and Miss Mabel Smith, both of Union township, from being married. About two weeks ago, while Mr. Speelman was working at his home he fell and broke his leg. Previously he and Miss Smith had decided on Thursday, July 13, as the wedding date. He did not know that an accident was to befall him, but was not to be outdone. When the appointed day arrived he telephoned for the minister, Rev. E. F. Gamble, and the ceremony was performed.

HARRISON HILL FOR CITY'S AVERAGE FAMILIES

The idea that Harrison Hill, which was laid out last year on Calhoun street, directly south of Rudisill boulevard, is strictly a "rich man's addition" is easily dispelled when one realizes that the priceof lots in this tract is but $22 per front foot. This false impression probably started by the fact that every improvement which would be likely to attract home builders to any section, whether it were a "rich man's addition" or not, has been included in Harrison Hill. Wide streets, parks, parkways, playgrounds, etc., are all included in the plat, and Hilgemann and Schaaf, the promoters, state that "although any rich man should be glad to live in Harrison Hill, it is not intended for rich men exclusively." The promoters are located in the North American building and will be glad to give any further information regarding this tract.

NO HOG CHOLERA IN ALLEN COUNTY

While the farmers in other counties are combating the ravages of hog cholera not a single case of it is known by local veterinarians in Allen county. Elkhart county is being troubled with an epidemic of the disease along the Elkhart river, supposed to have been caused by overflo wwater. Farmers are warned to take precautions against the spread of the disease and to use disinfectants thoroughly and keep the hog lots and houses cleaned. Hogs should also be kept away from streams and ditches. These precautions, veterinarians say, will go far to prevent the spread of the disease.

Tell Your Wife Now, What to Do With the Insurance Check.

Just at the time when your wife is least able to use her judgment, and consider a proposition unemotionally, she will receive a check from the insurance company—the evidence of your present forethought and unselfishness.

You should instruct her to deposit her insurance check in some good bank, and before withdrawing for investment of any kind seek the approval of her bankers.

Perhaps you should put these instructions in writing now, with the name of the bank. Then your foresight and unselfishness will not be in vain.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS FOR THE HOME

Colossians 3-1:11.

1. If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.
2. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.
3. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.
4. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.
5. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry:
6. For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience:
7. In the which ye also walked sometime, when ye lived in them.
8. But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth.
9. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds;
10. And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him:
11. Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all.

The first four verses illustrate the union of the believer with Christ, now and hereafter. The verses which follow illustrate the results which should follow that union. If all believers everywhere would make Christ their "all in all," what would this world be like?

A Working Congress.

The notification given Friday by Claude Kitchin, democratic house leader in congress, to President Wilson that with the passage of the corrupt practices act the house will have completed its entire legislative program for the present session, serves to emphasize once more the fact that congress under President Wilson's administration has been a working congress. It can point to a record of accomplishment in the handling of really big measures such as have been achieved seldom if ever in the history of the country. Beginning with the tariff revision and the federal reserve laws during the earlier days of the Wilson administration, congress has manifested an admirable purpose to do things worth while. There will be difference of opinion as to the wisdom of some of its legislative acts, because much of the program was a party program, undertaken in response to the plainly-indicated desire of the people who placed democracy in power. There will scarcely be serious question, however, of the purposeful determination with which congress has taken up and carried its work through.

The present house, for example, has had to deal with the Philippine and Porto Rican bills, preparedness legislation, new revenue demands, Mississippi flood control, shipping, rural credits and conservation, all of them items of first importance. In none of these, perhaps, has the desire of everybody been completely met, but in a very large way there has been intelligent and sincere desire to demonstrate a plain responsiveness to public demands and to do what gave most of promise in the interests of the public welfare. The senate is of necessity somewhat behind the house in its program, but it is speeding up with the prospect that final adjournment may come by mid-August. The president has been at times accused as a too insistent and too severe taskmaster in his attitude toward congress, but it has been because the party program was his program and he realized that the responsibility for its performance was also his. Teaming together, the president and congress have a notable record of actual accomplishment in the carrying out of the work to which they addressed themselves.

The nomination of Judge John H. Clarke, of Cleveland, by President Wilson to be the successor of Mr. Hughes on the bench of the supreme court, comes with something of a surprise from the fact that until a day or two previous to the appointment it had not been known that the president had the Cleveland man under consideration. All accounts agree, however, that Judge Clarke is an able lawyer and a fine, upstanding citizen with very pronounced views, a clear sense of justice and a courage that backs up his convictions. His ideas have been progressive, and he has manifested the keenest interest in affairs having to do with the public welfare. In fact, the most serious shortcoming alleged against him is that at 59 years of age he is still a bachelor.

The fact that within the week five cases have been filed in Fort Wayne charging as many fathers with neglect and failure to properly support their children is amply sufficient to justify the indignation, not only of the police department, which must deal with the offenders, but of every right-thinking citizen. It is dereliction of the most heartless and inexcusable sort, and will doubtless result in a vigorous application of that rather new but highly-recommended specific, the "lazy husband" law, which ought to work as well when innocent children are the sufferers as when unfortunate wives alone are forced to bear the burden of a husband who will not provide.

Indianapolis is in the midst of a strenuous campaign to build up a Red Cross organization, and so handsomely are the people responding that more than two thousand members were added in a single day. And the Red Cross is about as fine a manifestation of a splendid spirit as one is able to recall among the various movements that aspire to be helpful in a practical way. Indianapolis is making a record in this direction that is thoroughly admirable.

Colonel Roosevelt, in a letter to a Detroit man, enters a strenuous denial of the charge that he deserted the progressive party, insisting that he stuck with the ship until nine-tenths of the party had fled, and that any insinuation of desertion must be charged against the other fellow and not against the colonel. Those who are seeking the goat in the situation may as well look elsewhere. The colonel doesn't propose to be it.

Six former progressives of more or less distinction are included in the list of eighteen or twenty gentlemen selected by Mr. Hughes to manage the republican national campaign this year, but the presence of the honorable James A. Hemenway, of Indiana, on the roster, indicates clearly that Mr. Hughes is not disposed to have this progressive thing overdone.

OUR OWN OUTLAWS.

(Indiana Daily Times.)

We have bandits on the Mexican border and they must be stamped out. They are bad neighbors, and as such must change their habits or give way to orderly and law-abiding folk. We cannot continue to live next door to murderers and robbers. There are bad neighbors here at home in every community. The man who maintains on his premises a dirty, reeking stable where flies breed, and from which a nuisance spreads over the whole neighborhood, may not be a bandit, but he is a menace to his block and must be disciplined. The citizen who maintains on his lot a filthy, annoying, disgusting vault with no drain, permitting the shallow pit to fill and supplying therein a death-breeding center for the typhoid fly, thus endangering the lives of all nearby people, is a public contaminator and must be handled, in a sense, as an outlaw. The bandits commits bloody murder, but the typhoid victim who dies as a result of the neglect of a neighbor is just as dead as a Santa Ysabel massacre victim. And so it is that citizens who study the problems of public health must insist that stables and vaults shall be kept clean; that garbage cans shall be guarded; that tin cans and puddles shall not be permitted to breed mosquitoes, and that trash heaps shall be abolished everywhere. Cleanliness means a disappearance of flies and mosquitoes and disease-bearing agencies of all sorts, including rats. It is the duty of every citizen to observe all laws and to join his neighbors for cleanliness and health.

Poor foolish boy—Meigs, in the Lyric Theater building, 1012 Calhoun street, would have ground a new one in an hour or so and saved him two days and two dollars.

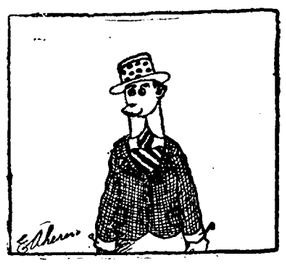
THE CUCKOO.

Oh! the cuckoo. I know you're giving us a treat Hussiff. We've always wanted to hear about the cuckoo.

Well, Gorgonzola, to start off, the cuckoo is the goof who lies awake nights wondering what the next style in collars



will be. He's the same boob that eats his meals in those invalid chair, steakless emporiums so he'll be able to buy some traffic-stopping neckties.

The big idea with the cuckoo is always to be dressed up like a sore thumb. He's the first bird to trot out a straw roof and the first to prance out in white flannel trousers.

The cuckoo usually can be found in some big office holding down a very important position, opening the mail, running errands and all-round office boy work.

He always is putting up the big front to the frails, like this: "So you like the shirt? I like it myself. I just stocked myself up for the summer, bought $65 worth this noon."

If a cuckoo was grabbed and held by the ankles a nickle and a laundry check would probably roll out on the parquet. Will somebody put the importers of ivory wise that Africa isn't the only place to get it?

SELLING PESOS AT A HANDSOME PROFIT

Manila, P. I., June 15.—Correspondence of The Associated Press).—The Philippine government has just sold to the government of British India 7,500,000 silver pesos at a profit of close to half a million dollars over the original cost of the currency. The pesos when coined, each contained about thirty cents worth of silver but the price at which they were sold was 38.6 cents.

The phenomenal rise in the price of silver the world over some weeks ago led officials of the insular government to study the question of the wisdom of disposing of a part of the silver hoard which the Philippines purchased at the low prices current in 1902 and 1903. At that time this purchase was made necessary by law to secure the issuance of 34,000,000 pesos of paper currency (silver certificates). A later law, passed in 1906, permitted a large part of this issue of silver certificates to be secured by gold but the government then had in its vaults 34,000,000 silver pesos, coined at a cost of thirty cents apiece.

Some weeks ago J. L. Manning, the insular treasurer, was sent to Hongkong to look into the silver market and to confer with officials of the government of Indian, then in the market for silver. The net result of his trip was the sale of about one-fifth of the government's hoard. The delivery of the silver is to be made at the Manila branch of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking corporation, in lots of a million pesos. The coin is then to be transferred to India, where it is to be melted into bullion in the presence of Insular Auditor C. H. French, who is now enroute to India to fulfil this duty.

GO TO CHURCH SUNDAY

Rededication Services to Occupy the Entire Day on Sunday.

Tomorrow the renovated church of the Emmaus congregation will be rededicated to the service of the Lord. Two services will be held, a German service at 10:00 a. m. with celebration of holy communion. Rev. Georgi, of Woodburn, will deliver the dedicatory sermon. Rev. Ph. Wambsganss will preach the confessional sermon. An English service will be held in the evening with the assistant pastor in the pulpit. Special music and singing by the organist, Prof. H. Hahn, and the two Emmaus choirs will be a feature of the services. In the evening, Rev. Ph. Wambsganss will sing several solos.

Fifteen years ago the church was completed. The congregation observed this event by the resolution to have the interior of the church frescoed and painted. For the past twelve weeks the auditorium of the church was closed to public worship and divine services were held in the auditorium of Emmaus hall. In the evening service all members who, during the past fifteen years have been confirmed in the church, will be guests of honor. They will assemble in Emmaus hall and march into the church in a body. The public is invited to both services. The money to defray the expense of renovation has been collected by the ladies of the church. They have raised almost enough money. The remainder will be raised through a special envelope collection which will be taken up in both services tomorrow. The morning service begins at 10 a. m. The evening services at 7:45 p. m.

MR. DYE SAYS HE'LL NEVER STAND FOR THAT

Moose Committeeman Will Fight Ouster Action by Committee.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 15.—William Holton Dye, who was ousted as progressive national committeeman by the resolution of the progressive state committee adopted last Monday, told State Chairman Edwin M. Lee yesterday that he declined to recognize the right of the committee to vacate his seat.

Dye's letter to Lee is as follows:

"Your letter of the 13th received. I am informed by some of the state central committee, who were present, that it does not state the facts. I am told that the resolution was not unanimously passed.

"I cannot be assured from your statement what was done or what was not done at this meeting, and I decline to recognize the right of the committee to take any such action as you state was taken."

Dye Issues Statement.

Dye, who was in Marion, Ind., Thursday when Chairman Lee made public the letter and resolution containing the state committee's decision to oust him as national committeeman, returned to Indianapolis yesterday morning.

The letter of ouster came as a complete surprise to him, but late in the day, after conference with some of his political advisers, he made the following statement:

"This is really a crisis in our nation's history, which demands, on the part of every true progressive, some sacrifices. The progressive vote in most of the states has become very small and the third ticket could not possibly be elected.

"Our country needs concentrated, effective action to preserve it from the dangers of incompetent inefficiency of those in control of the democratic party.

"A large majority of the progressive national committee are of the opinion that Mr. Hughes can and will save the national situation. They believe that he is truly patriotic, of broad vision, with a hatred of 'boss' rule, with a strong desire to have efficient, competent, worthy men in control of the government, instead of mere professional politicians.

"Mr. Hughes has the support of most of the leaders of our great progressive movement — Col. Roosevelt, Gifford Pinchot, Governor Johnson, Garfield, Perkins, and nearly all those other great leaders in whom we put such confidence in 1912. The national committee had a reason to believe that the thing which has happened would happen—namely that the leading progressives would be asked to counsel, advise and direct the Hughes campaign.

"So I voted with thirty-six other national committeemen to indorse Col. Roosevelt's statement, and to indorse Mr. Hughes, but without committing any individual in the party or any state organization to our course, each state being released and given full authority to disband its organization or to maintain it, as they saw fit; to have a state ticket if they saw fit, whether it availed anything or not. We as a committee expressed our view that the election of Mr. Hughes will give to the great body of progressive thinkers in the United States a realization of their aims in a larger measure than in any other way.

No Time to Foster Grudges.

"I am sure that the hundreds of thousands of voters in Indiana who take a glimpse of the national situation and the economic dangers which are apt to confront us after this war, thoroughly understand and have implicit confidence in my position and will back the stand that I took at the Chicago conference of the progressive national committeemen. They will realize that this is not a time for the fostering of petty grudges or the cultivation of jealousy; that it is not a time to act through pique or prejudice of party hatred. The welfare of our country is the first thing under consideration. It is a time for co-operative citizenship, endeavoring to obtain in the quickest, most effective way permanent peace, prosperity and progress for America and her people.

"And to do this we must vote in a way that will guarantee the greatest measure of success of the principles for which progressives have been so nobly fighting in a way that will attain for the progressives the most effective control or participation in the handling of the country's affairs. We must avoid absolutely any possibility of the organization which we have built up being used by persons for the satisfaction of selfish greed or as a means of revenge to satisfy bitter personal disappointment. We must always remember that it is not party emblem or party name for which we have striven, but the permanent establishment of progressive principles whenever and wherever and to whatever extent it could be done."

Dye's defense of the action of the committee, together with his complete ignoring of the progressive state chairman's references of the action of the "committee of nine," will present national committee representation, as well as the question of delegate representation from the counties of Indiana, as live issues on the floor of the progressive state convention at the Odd Fellow building Thursday.

Evans Lippincott, Mrs. d'Isay's son-in-law, is ill and was taken to Cambridge Springs on Saturday to see if he might be benefited there. Mrs. Lippincott and son Morss accompanied him and Mrs. d'Isay will remain with others of the family for a time, or until Mr. Lippincott is so much improved that previous plans of going to Leland, Mich., can be carried out.

The honor parties for Miss Georgia Wirth, a bride-to-be of August, have begun and showers of useful and pretty gifts are telling her of the affection and interest her friends are taking in her nuptials. A pretty affair of this character was given on Friday evening by Miss Eda Siemon, at her home in Rockhill street. The amusement of the evening was the dressing of clothespin dolls in bridal array, which was an entertainment of fingers all enjoyed, while quite in keeping with that bit of work were the favors at supper time, pretty bisque dolls dressed as brides. The table was also decorated with pink and white sweetpeas and gladioli, while Miss Wirth received baskets much wrapped in white tissue paper with pink sweetpeas peeping out here and there and which contained gifts from the entire company. There were present Misses Ilda Meyer, of St. Louis; Norah Williams, Juliette Lange, Margaret Shulze, Fern Kyle, Irene Rohyans, Janet Howey, Marguerite Wirth, Lillian Walbott, Wava Sarman, Christine Pepe, Mrs. J. H. Schroeder, Mrs. Ray Fish, Mrs. Charles Alexander and Mrs. Paul Johnson.

AT THE PALACE

Famous Photo Play "Where Are My Children?" Closes Tonight.

The film opens with the trial of a physician who has been accused of circulating obscene literature because he has been giving out propaganda on birth control among the illiterate, the sick, insane and criminally inclined. By a series of flash backs some of the scenes of desolations and sufferings among which children are reared in the slums of our cities are projected until one is tempted to cry out "let them propogate no more." From that point the story takes up the denial of children by the educated, the wealthy and the healthy, depicting the sufferings and mental tortures that follow in the wake of these transgressions against nature's laws.

BY LOIS CRANE.

Cinderella gazed disconsolately at her reflection in the mirror—a sorry sight. In spite of all her efforts, her flimsy skirt slumped at her ankles like a beaten cur. She had experiment with all sorts of patterns, but, like false friends, they refused to come to her aid. Vainly did she try to solve the problem of how to attain the bouffant effect flaunted by her stepsisters and the other fashionables.

The clock struck twelve, and her godmother appeared. Immediately the good woman set to work with her wand. A few moments and what a remarkable transformation. Cinderella beheld herself no longer dowdy, but attired in accordance with the latest silhouette. Piquantly her skirts stood out in the bouffant effect she long desired. Her fairy godmother had indeed used a witching wand—some call it Wichtex. This supple fabric is suitable for interlinings. Resilient and very light, it accomplishes the purpose of hoops or crinoline. Many of the leading couturs depend on Wichtex to achieve the flaring silhouette demanded by Paris. This fabric is also a great boon to the home dressmaker. By using it for interlinings in skirts and coats, bouffant effects may be obtained with little difficulty.

Separate skirts and shirt waists hold a permanent place in the American woman's wardrobe. For business and sport they have been proven practical, as well as becoming. The separate skirt is just now especially popular. The vogue for sweaters and sport coats renders it indispensable. In the striking model illustrated here, taffeta in huge black and white checks is featured. Wichtex is responsible for the extreme flaring skirt. A band, knee depth, was used as an interlining. The bag pockets are quaint, and in a season of pockets attract more than their share of attention.

The new corsets are very much "pinched in." The draped belt of this skirt is designed to mold such a waist line.

WHITE DOTS EMBROIDERED ON CHIFFON

ONE never knows just how hand embroidery is apt to be applied to a frock. Surely no one ever thought of embroidering white dots on chiffon, but here is proof that it can be done, and successfully, too.

Dark blue being the background for the dots, they are all the more conspicuous. In fact, they should prove very cooling, for they suggest a quiet fall of snowflakes.

The blouse is made in the popular Russian effect and is held in at the waist line by means of a white crepe de chine sash, which is cleverly bound with some of the dotted chiffon. The same idea is carried out in the bow attached at the neck.

Double folds of the chiffon are employed to give the effect of bands on the bottom of the blouse and on the skirt.

HAND WORK FOR THE STYLISH BABY

IT IS always such a disappointment to see hours of fine hand work made up into a baby's frock that is anything but graceful or stylish. It seems such a waste of effort. Of course, some designs call for unbecoming lines for the wee frocks, but if you are wise you will select for your embroidery only a yoke design and a "repeat" which can be applied to a skirt or ruffle.

and hand-run tucks. Finest nainsook is the material. The little yoke, after it has been embroidered, has been cut quite deep, so that it gives a long shoulder line and necessitates only a tiny ruffle for a sleeve. To this yoke the skirt is set, after a panel of fine tucks, almost pin tucks, has first been run by hand back and front.

A fine French seam beading should be used at every seam. The embroidered ruffle is then set on with beading. As a finish a pointed edge of the material is added to the ruffle and sleeves. This is made by folding bias pieces of material and stitching them in points along the edge of the ruffles.

NOVELTY FOR THE CHILDREN

HAVE you seen the new pajamas for the babies and children? They are made of crepe, and are cool and comfortable, besides being a delight to the children. They come in pink, blue, white or flowered, made just like "grown-ups'" pajamas, excepting that they button across the back. In spite of the extreme summer heat, the evenings are quite frequently cool, so that if the children should get uncovered they will not catch cold. The little bedroom slippers to match can be obtained at a very reasonable price.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

To Remove Rust Stains

Have you any remedy for removing rust stains? They are so ugly, and I can't wear the skirt as it is. Mrs. D. G.

Cover the spots with sweet oil, well rubbed in, and allow it to remain for forty-eight hours. Then rub with powdered unslacked lime.

Use for a Raincoat

I have a raincoat that is perfectly good in some places and worn out in others. I was wondering if you could suggest a way to repair it. Mrs. T. B.

It depends upon where the worn-out places are: If in the hem or in the seams it would be very simple to paste them together again. If you have any small children you could make a very nice raincoat for them out of it if you find you can not mend it for yourself.

GIFTS SMALL BUT THOUGHTFUL

ARE you following the "small gift" craze? Has the high cost of living sent you out scooting after the little remembrance which will bring a good thought for some auspicious occasion, but will not rob the penny bank for months? Then listen to these artistic little reminders, which may all be had for less than a hundred pennies.

For the friend who likes auto outings select a wooden bucket, which is of cardboard, square and folds up into a small flat box, all nicely decorated and telling in verse the story of its contents.

If you know a girl who is having her own troubles in a third-floor back, just parcel post her this small clothesline reel to show her that she has a thoughtful friend to remember her.

It's preserving time, and jelly glass lids are always getting lost. Make your special Mrs. Housewife happy by a set of paper ones, all nicely folded into a wee box.

Maybe this same housewife will like an ironing pad, all nicely embroidered, with a beeswax pad to go with it. She will also find use in the hot weather for a paper bag for the ice, which keeps it from melting from under her very eyes when the thermometer soars.

A set of three invaluable kitchen utensils take on airs when they come all tied up in a pretty box. They are an egg separator, a spoon rest and a milk bottle cap lifter and top combined.

The fussy man will be glad to get a door wedge of stained wood to keep his door from banging when summer winds blow hard.

IN BASQUE EFFECT

AS AN outcome of the vogue for blouses with peplums, women are now offered a blouse in true basque effect—that is, while the blouse boasts of no peplum it is made to be worn outside the skirt. It buttons down the front with buttons too small and too numerous to count. The deep girdle and the convenient pockets are of blue taffeta, while the rest of the basque is of blue chiffon. Long, tight-fitting sleeves emphasize the basque idea. A full puff of taffeta placed just beneath the shoulder breaks the monotony of the long line. White liberty satin is used for a high, soft collar, a tiny vest and a frill at the cuffs.

Another type of basque is made of blue and white striped taffeta. The front closes in surplice line, fastening with two buttons of cut steel, below the line of a deep yoke. Unlike the first basque, the sleeves are elbow length and are trimmed with ruches of the silk from the edge half way to the shoulder.

WICKER AND THE PORCH

IT really seems as if there were no article of furniture which you could not get in that delightful summery material, wicker, for the porch. Every kind of an easy chair, all sorts of tables, bookcases and low tabarets can be found in the wicker weaving. Now there is a wicker birdcage posed on a standard, which shows several wicker holders for flower vases in the course of its length. There is a porch swing of wicker also, all ready to be attached by ropes or chains to the porch roof. Then there are what one might term "carry-alls." They vary in size from the huge basket which resembles the log basket to be found at the side of a fireplace, to smaller ones large enough to serve a half dozen glasses of lemonade or iced tea. Really, they may be used as general catch-alls on the porch to hold books and newspapers, a tennis racquet or a stray magazine.

A high stand of wicker with a sunken metal receptacle for a fern is the climax of wicker loveliness. All these articles can be bought in plain wicker and enameled to match any color scheme.

MONKEYS TO SAVE NATION'S BABIES.

Medical experts leading the fight to stamp out infantile paralysis have sent an appeal to the zoos of America for monkeys for use in experiments to find a preventative and cure for the dreaded disease.

There is need for an immediate supply of the simians, say health authorities, if they are to prevent a widespread epidemic of the scourge that is taking a death toll in New York of more than one baby every hour.

Orders for large numbers of monkeys have been sent to South America and other countries where the primates abound, but the shipments will not be available for at least thirty days. Time is essential to effective warfare against the disease.

Practically all that is known about infantile paralysis has been learned through experiments on monkeys in laboratories of the medical world.

Monkeys do not contract this particular disease, but in some ways they are so much like man they offer the greatest chance for experiments.

There are other diseases to which the monkey is just as susceptible as human beings. Many contract tuberculosis and pneumonia.

There are many paralytic diseases similar to infantile paralysis that are known to occur among monkeys, but infantile paralysis is peculiar to man.

Years ago it was demonstrated that infantile paralysis could be transmitted from monkey to man by the bite of a stable fly.

MAKING APPEAL TO REVOLUTION CHIEFS

New Chinese President is Eager for Peace and Unity in Land.

Peking, June 15.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press).—President Li Yuan-hung has appealed through personal telegrams for the co-operation of prominent revolutionary leaders in restoring peace and uniting the north and south. Tang Shao-yi, formerly premier under Yuan Shi-kai, Kang Yu-wei, who inspired many reforms in Emperor Kuang Hsu and was forced by the empress dawager to flee for his life in 1898, and Liang Chi-chao, the most famous disciple of Kang Yu-wei, are among the reformers Li Yuan-hung has asked to assist in the movement to bring about peace.

The following is a translation of a telegram which has been sent by the president to many influential revolutionists: "Heaven has afflicted China and disasters and disturbances have arrived in succession. On the 6th instant President Yuan Shi-kai died of illness, and I succeeded him the next day in accordance with the provisions made in the law of the country. At this time of political storm, there is an empty exchequer, and the country is exhausted. Being a man of little ability, I feel that I am unable to hold so great a responsibility. As you are men of profound learning, I hope that you will give me advice in all important state affairs."

Kang Yu-wei lived in America for many years after he was forced to leave China because the empress dowager had placed a price on his head. He also resided for some time in Japan. Liang Chi-chao also lived abroad for a long time, chiefly in Japan.

Efforts to get these leaders to Peking have been futile. They apparently have no intention of coming to the Chinese capital at this time. Consequently informal negotiations are in progress at Shanghai, and the Peking government hopes to arrange for a more formal conference in that city preparatory to reconciling the north and the south.

China is really divided into three sections politically at the present time. The four southernmost provinces are under the sway of Cantonese leaders. Tsai Ao, who inaugurated the present revolution, is probably the best known leader in the four southernmost provinces, but he has remained constantly in Yunnan province, far west of Canton, and consequently has not participated in the deliberations at Canton.

Central China, or the Yang-tse valley country, is practically dominated by the military. General Feng Kuo-chang at Nanking, and General Ni Shi-chung are the foremost leaders in that section.

(Here is the British view of the trip of the German super-submarine Deutschland from Germany to the United States, as voiced by Hector Bywater, member of the Navy league and associate editor of the Navy League Annual, the most authoritative work of the kind in the world, in a special interview for The Sentinel.

For several years prior to the outbreak of the war, Bywater was stationed at Berlin to watch German naval activities. His views on the exploit of the Deutschland probably coincide with those of the British admiralty because he is in close touch with that body. Bywater is in the United States on a special mission.—EDITOR).

BY J. HERBERT DUCKWORTH.

New York, July 15.—Great Britain will not tremble at the exploit of the German U-boat Deutschland in making a trip from Germany to the United States, according to Hector Bywater, member of the Navy league and associate editor of the Navy League Annual.

In an interview here following the landing of the Deutschland at Baltimore, Bywater said:

"Of actual practical value the achievement is worth absolutely nothing. It will not release England's struggle hold of Germany's overseas commerce. It will not save her from economic starvation. One small British tramp, or which are scores in New York now, can carry as much as 50 costly underwater liners.

"From a picturesque point of view the trip was admirable, but there is nothing surprising about it. At least sixteen British submarines, most of them of American origin, but some designed and built in Canada, made the trip across the Atlantic to Gibraltar, then to the Dardanelles over a year ago, and some of these submarines were only half the size of the Deutschland.

"For this voyage the Deutschland had to take out all armament, the torpedo tubes and torpedoes, which are extremely bulky and take up a lot of space. The room and weight thus saved could be devoted to oil which would almost double the cruising capacity.

"The average British submarine cruising radius is 2,500 miles. With armament removed it would be increased to 4,000 miles.

"No unusual problems of navigation are to be met in a voyage in a submarine across the Atlantic. The trip is hard on the men as there are few facilities for exercise.

"Another thing which makes the performance considerably less remarkable than the feats that have been accomplished by allied submarines is that from the moment Capt. Koenig got clear of the German coast until he arrived off the American coast he had open water all the way. No hostile mine fields had to be navigated and no war vessels had to be avoided. The only possible danger was from allied cruisers.

"The voyage of the Deutschland cannot be compared with trips constantly made by British submarines during the Dardanelles operations when they passed, time after time, through the Straits which had been literally honeycombed with mines and nets.

"When war broke out England had nearly completed the submarines Nautilus and Swordfish which are 950 ton vessels, and she has since built submersibles of over 1,000 tons. The Deutschland's gross tonnage, according to the bill of health given by the American consul in Bremen, is 791.

"A suggestion that Germany intends to maintain a regular submarine service across the Atlantic does not appeal as a practical proposition as the space available for cargo is extremely limited. The aggregate cargo of almost 50 of the largest submarines which Germany is said to possess would total up to less than the corresponding capacity of a small tramp.

"In carrying papers and valuable and rare chemicals such a line of submarines might be very profitable to the owners, but I feel the scheme will not do very much to help Germany."

THIRTY-FIVE YEARS IN ONE OFFICE

"Jack" Rohyans Has Remarkable Record for Service With Pennsy.

Thirty-five years ago today, on July 15, 1881, John N. Rohyans, known by his intimate associates as "Jack" Rohyans, began work in the clerical department of the Pennsylvania shops, under Shop Clerk Thomas Meegan. In March, 1883, the clerical department of the Northwest motive power system was established and Mr. Rohyans was transferred, becoming one of the five clerks employed in that department at the start. He remains there in a responsible clerical capacity. From five men, of which J. T. Leary, auditor of the Baltimore and Ohio, was one, the department has expanded until it now includes over fifty. Mr. Rohyans is also a member of the Pennsylvania Employes' Veteran association, and has held office in that society ever since it was organized. He is a native of Germany and came with his parents to America when he was only thirteen years old.

LABOR GROWS MORE SCARCE.

General Electric Works Needs 500 Men and Women.

"We need labor of all kinds," said Employment Agent W. F. Melching of the General Electric works, this morning. "We have today good positions with steady employment to offer to several hundred men and women. All kinds of skilled and unskilled laborers are needed and will be given positions at once," said Mr. Melching. The General Electric works has increased its working force several hundred in the past two years and as soon as the big shops now under construction on Wall street are up and equipped, 2,000 more men and women will be needed. The pay rolls now contain upwards of 2,600 names and provision can be made at present in the shops for several hundred more men and women and the management is anxious to get them.

LABORER BADLY HURT

John Nessel, a laborer at the Wabash shops, a part of whose duties is to ice the drinking water tanks in the offices and shops, was severely hurt this morning as he attempted to lower a big piece of ice from the door of the icehouse to the ground. It got beyond control and fell upon him, bruising and spraining his hips. Mr. Nessel was taken to the Wabash hospital at Peru on train No. 1, at noon today. The injured man is unmarried.

MAY PUT UP NEW PRESIDENT.

Cleveland papers say that there is a likelihood of a change in the official roster of the Nickel Plate when reorganization takes place that will involve the retirement from the presidency of William H. Canniff and the election of John J. Benet, vice president of the New York Central company. Mr. Benet is forty-eight years old. He learned the blacksmith's trade and spent five years of his early life at the forge. Then he acquired the telegraph trade and began service with the N. Y. C. in the capacity of an operator. Thence he passed through a series of promotions which led to his present office, which he has occupied about two years.

WILL HAVE BIG CROWD

Division Passenger Agent W. H. Shorey, of the Wabash, who has been working in the interest of the excursion to St. Louis, which leaves this city at 10 o'clock tonight, expects a big crowd. Excursions to that city have not been very frequent, but the growing interest in them will result in more large crowds. In making note of the excursion tonight, it was erroneously stated by one of the city papers that the special train would leave at 10 o'clock this morning. It leaves at 10 o'clock tonight.

VETERAN HAS BIRTHDAY.

John Schuster, gate watchman for the Pennsylvania company at Lafayette street, reached his seventieth year today. Mr. Schuster is a veteran in the employ of the Pennsylvania company, having been with them for over forty-six years. He worked in the machine shop until a few years ago, when an injury forced him to give up that position, and he was given the watch at Lafayette street. He will be retired to the pension department August 1.

BIG CROWD OF BOOSTERS.

General Electric band, followed by 200 "boosters," marched to the ball grounds at 2 o'clock this afternoon. There is a game of ball between the Electricians and the Bowers at the park this afternoon and each side has a large contingent of boosters. The game is to decide to whom the game of last week, which was a tie, belongs.

GAVE EMPLOYES A BONUS.

In accordance with his idea of just dealing, Van B. Perrine, president of the Perrine-Armstrong Lumber company caused to be distributed among the employes of the concern checks representing 10 per cent. of their wages for the first half of the year. Another distribution covering the latter half of the year will follow the holiday season.

GOING EAST ON BUSINESS.

Commercial Agent A. L. Gilbert, of the Wabash, left today for Pittsburg on business for the company. He will endeavor to get to Toledo tomorrow morning to spend the day with his son, Division Freight Agent D. E. Gilbert. The latter was here in a business way a few hours yesterday.

HEAT INTERFERES WITH WORK.

Because of the extreme heat and the fact that many of the men were planning trips out of the city, operations in the blacksmith department at the Bass shops were almost entirely suspended this morning. This opportunity was used to clean and repair some of the furnaces and make other slight changes about the shop.

TO ELECTRIC LIGHT MEETING.

A. A. Serva, sales manager of the General Electric works, and C. I. Hall, of the meter engineering department, accompanied by their wives, will leave tomorrow in an automobile for Cedar Point, Ohio, where the gentlemen will attend the annual convention of the Ohio State Electric Light association, which will be held next week.

FAILED TO GET THE BOYS.

Up to 2 o'clock this afternoon Capt. H. C. Stoll, of the Pennsylvania police department, had not been able to locate the two boys who fired into the Broadway limited Thursday evening and wounded four passengers. Captain Stoll is inclined to regard the incident as accidental. Fearing the results, the lads are keeping their identity hidden.

FALLS FROM LUMBER PILE.

W. Maszkewcz, a foreigner, living at 1307 Ohio street, fell from the top of a large pile of lumber while at work in the Pennsylvania lumber yard this morning. The man was badly shaken up and bruised, but it is thought that his condition is not serious.

HORSES CARRY PART OF BRAINS IN U. S. WORLD-BEATING CAVALRY

(By Leon Starmont.)

El Paso, Texas, July 3.—Investigation in military quarters here leads me to the conclusion that one portion of the brains of the United States cavalry lies in the fine heads of its horses.

I attended a troop drill at Fort Bliss. Down the parade ground came the line of horses at a sharp trot. They were the same kind of animals that accomplished the wonderful march of 110 miles in Mexico in 42 hours.

Suddenly, a few shrill, ascending notes of a bugle rang out. Every horse turned to the right, without waiting for the pinch of a bit or the touch of a knee. They knew what the call meant, just as well as their riders.

Squads right, column right, squads left, right turn, right by squads—they went through them all without a break. Their ears seemed to quiver for the signal. At the "charge" they galloped down the field with a thunder of hoofs that beat as evenly as a hundred giant drums.

The tricks of circus horses seemed simple by comparison. Yet, the amazing spectacle was the result of only a few months training of animals bought "green" from the farms and sales stables of the whole country.

The horse in the cavalry is considered as an animal of a SINGLE IDEA. The men who train him have no false illusions regarding his "almost human intelligence." They know an animal cannot reason beyond the limit of his own experience. So they reason with him BY ACTS ALONE.

A trooper may talk to his horse. In fact, some get the habit of telling their mounts all their private troubles and really believe the horses understand.

However, in the matter of purely military training, few words are ever used. The horse soon learns there are certain general rules governing all bugle calls. Ascending notes indicate the movement is to be to the right. Descending notes that the movement is to the left. The signals are distinguished as the common "Whoa!" and "Giddap!"

The first object in the training of a cavalry horse is to eliminate his fear of unfamiliar objects. When he shies at a gun, or a flag, he is allowed to touch or smell it. A good horse shies only at objects which he is afraid will hurt him.

Troopers who train the horses are selected for intelligence and natural love of horses. Army officers recognize that horses respond to the affection of a human being.

Punishment is given only when necessary and then only immediately after the offense is committed, so the horse may know why he is punished. A trooper who punishes a horse in anger may be punished himself.

Every man in the cavalry is taught that under harsh treatment the horse will become timid, then sullen and at length violent and unmanageble. After punishment, the horse is always treated with great kindness.

Green horses are made accustomed to shoeing by frequent tapping on their feet. Every trooper is instructed to handle his horse so the animal will learn that he does not have to kick to protect himself when a man grasps his legs.

Every man in the cavalry has to memorize this paragraph from the book of cavalry drill regulations:

"Every action of the trooper should tend to induce full confidence that no harm is intended to the horse and that nothing but kind treatment is to be expected."

HERZOG IS WILLING TO BE TRADED OFF

Cincinnati Manager Consents to Transfer if Herrmann Desires It.

Cincinnati, July 15.—Charles Herzog, manager of the Cincinnati Nationals said today that he had consented to his transfer to some other club if President August Herrman desired to make a trade.

Herrmann is at present in New York, where he is reported to have been in conference with President Hempstead, of the New York Nationals regarding a deal for Herzog. It is said that Hempstead will accompany Herrman to Cincinnati and that they will meet Herzog and endeavor to arrange the final terms of the deal.

Herzog has been manager of the Cincinnati team for the past two years and a half, coming here from New York in the spring of 1914 in exchange for Bob Becher and outfield and catcher Hartley. Hartley joined the federal league before the season started and never reported here.

The case of J. McGraw, manager of the New York Nationals, who was charged yesterday in a warrant sworn to by John T. Reed, a Cincinnati "fan," with disorderly conduct, was continued until August 29, in the municipal court here today. The case of Shortstop Fletcher of the Giants, on a like charge, was continued to the same date.

McGraw and Fletcher were represented by an attorney whom they had engaged before they departed for St. Louis last night.

FIXING UP THE DEAL.

New York, July 15.—President H. N. Hempstead, of the New York league club, and Garry Herrmann, of the Cincinnati club, were in conference here today relative to a deal which may involve one or more players of the Giants to be exchanged for Charles Herzog, manager of the Cincinnati team. None of the officials of the local club would discuss the status of the proposed deal, but it was intimated that a statement might be forthcoming later.

It was reported that among the players being considered by the Cincinnati club were Pitcher Christy Mathewson, Captain Larry Doyle, the Giants second baseman; Arthur Fletcher, shortstop, and Infielder McKechnie.

PARDON FOR MAN WHO ESCAPED YEARS AGO

Ralston Extends Clemency to Man Now in Ohio Penitentiary.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 15.—An unusual case was acted on favorably by Governor Ralston yesterday when he signed a pardon for Fred Connor, alias George Ray, who fifteen years ago escaped from the Indiana reformatory and never was recaptured to serve the remainder of his sentence. The man now is serving a term in the Ohio penitentiary, having been sentenced to that institution Sept. 23, 1908, for a long term for safe blowing.

The governor issued a pardon on a showing that Connor's record has been clear in the Ohio prison and was excellent in the Indiana reformatory up to the time of his escape. Friends and relatives of the prisoner urged executive clemency in order that Connor might have a better chance to obtain a parole from the Ohio institution.

The governor, in addition to granting paroles to six men and remitting fines in three cases, announced that he would not issue the parole approved a few days ago in the case of John Grube, a "trusty" at the Indiana reformatory. Grube escaped from the institution at almost the same time the governor had indicated approval of the pardon board's recommendation that the prisoner be paroled.

Paroled to Join Show.

Five prisoners at the state farm will receive paroles to become employes of Gentry Bros.' Dog and Pony show. The men affected by this action are Henry Lenfors, Clayton Menard, Walter Durbin, Donald Glasscock and Otho Dearing. Fourteen men recently obtained paroles to start work with the Gentry shows, half of their wages to be turned over to C. E. Talkington, superintendent of the farm, to be paid the men upon the expiration of their sentences.

Virgil May, who was sentenced from Clay county, November 14, 1914, to a term of two to fourteen years in the reformatory for assault and battery with intent to commit a felony, will receive a parole. It was shown that May was convicted on circumstantial evidence and that he has a wife and child dependent upon him for support. Clemency was also recommended by Thomas C. Daily, president of the board of trustees of the institution, in behalf of the board.

Fines Remitted.

Floyd Cahill, Hancock county, sentenced March 29, 1916, to serve ninety days at the county farm and pay a fine of $250 for assault and battery.

William P. Chowning, Vigo county, sentenced to serve 180 days at the state farm and to pay a fine of $500 and costs for child desertion.

Cahill was granted clemency at the request of the trial judge and various other persons familiar with the case. They asserted that Cahill, who is only 19 years old and an orphan, has no means of paying the fine. Barr will be freed from the Elkhart county jail in order to provide for his wife, who is said to be sorely in need of his support. Chowning, it was shown, in addition to having been a model prisoner, should be permitted to care for his wife, who has just been discharged from a hospital.

TELL OF TERRIFIC BATTLE WITH GALE

Charleston, S. C., July 15.—Tales of the unsuccessful fight of the naval collier Hector against a gale which blew from 110 to 120 miles an hour, great seas, fires and disabled engines and the daring rescue of 102 men by the Wellington were brought here today by the first survivors to land.

The Wellington, storm battered and having lost her two barges, worked for six hours taking off the crew and sixty marines which the Hector was taking from Port Royal to Guantanamo. Captain Joseph Newell, of the Hector, and about 20 men were taken off later by the steamer Cypress, and the broken Hector was left to her fate, seven miles northeast of Cape Romaine. No member of the ship's company was lost but four were hurt.

The Hector left Charleston lightship Wednesday. Thursday morning she ran into the worst of the hurricane sweeping up the coast. Huge waves broke over the vessel and poured down the hatches, flooding the holds and disabling the engines. When she was unable to make way, wireless calls for help were sent out.

As the big collier rolled at the mercy of the wind which was driving her toward Cape Romaine, fires broke out in the hold. They did not gain headway but added to the terror of those aboard.

The Wellington reached the collier at one o'clock Friday afternoon. The Hector's launch had been disabled by the storm but a small boat with all hands at work succeeded in reaching the Wellington. The dangerous work of transferring the men was immediately started and continued for six hours. Captain Newell with about a score of men elected to remain on the forward part of the Hector, which then had almost parted at about midships. The Wellington started for this port and the Cypress set out to take off Captain Newell as it seemed certain there was no chance to save the collier. At 8 o'clock last night Captain Newell and the men who remained with him were forced to leave the Hector.

There were five men aboard each of the barges the Wellington lost while trying to tow them from Philadelphia to Jacksonville. The Wellington left today to search for them.

COURT HOUSE ROOMS FLOODED.

Effect of Terrific Rain Seen at County Building.

Heavy rains of Friday afternoon caused water to stand on the floors of the anteroom and the main room of the court of county commissioners, in the court reporters room in the southeast section of the building and in one of the lavatories on the first floor.

With the sewers overflowing and the large down spouts taking the heavy rainfall from the roof, the water was forced up through the water basins in the rooms of the county commissioners and in the lavatory. There was some water in the basement but not enough to do much damage.

The water was forced through the basins in an effort to get an outlet.

CARRIED AWAY HIVE OF BEES

Newcastle, Ind., July 15.—Carrying home a hive of bees, found on a public lot, would not be a job that many would care to undertake, but to have to carry it back where the bees were found, would be exasperating to say the least. However, this was the penalty imposed on George Payne, charged with petit larceny in police court this morning. On his way home, in the south part of the city, a few days ago Payne saw a hive of bees on a public dump and proceeded to carry it home. It so happened that the hive had belonged to James Ball. The bees had left home and swarmed on the dump. Ball moved the hive to the dump hoping that they would again enter it. When Ball located his bees he filed an affidavit charging petit larceny against Payne.

METCHNIKOFF, NOTED BACTERIOLOGIST, DIES

Scientist of World-Wide Fame Passes Away in Paris.

Paris, July 15.—(6:37 p. m.)—Professor Elie Metchnikoff, the famous bacteriologist is dead.

Professor Elie Metchnikoff was world-famous as an exponent of theories for the prolongation of human life. He was popularly known as the great advocate of the 'sour milk cure" for old age, believing that the principal agent in senile decay was the continuous auto-intoxication of the body through the putrefaction of matter in the large intestine and that the bacteria which cause such putrefaction could be effectively combated by preparations of milk soured by cultures of selected lactic acid bacilli. Later Professor Metchnikoff went so far as to declare that the large intestine was as useless in the human body as is the appendix, and prophesied that the day would come when it would be a commonplace operation to remove it.

Discovers New Microbe.

He was the discoverer in 1912 of a new microbe which he called the "glycobacteria" in the intestines of a dog and in a paper before the French Academy of Scences he announced his belief that the inoculation of the large intestine in human beings with this germ would go still further than the sour milk treatment toward the prevention of senile decreptitude. The "glycobacteria," it was explained, were sugar baccilli of which the large intestine stood in need because the sugar that was ordinarily taken into the body had already been digested and absorbed by the blood before it reached the large intestinal tract.

Of this discovery, Professor Metchnikoff himself said: "In the course of my recent researches I found that there exists in the large intestine of human beings a certain quantity of poisonous substances, which are called indols and phenols, and which have been proved responsible for the gradual decay of the system, known as old age. These can be destroyed only by sugar, but in the ordinary way any sugar or sugary substances taken into the system are digested long before they can reach that far. This applies to some extent to the lactic acid treatment which I have advocated for some time past. The problem has been, therefore, to discover some means of producing sugar within the colon by some means after digestion, and my present claim is that I have found a sugar-producing microbe, which I call 'glycobacteria' and which is only to be found in the intestines of the dog. It may be objected that dogs are not specially long lived. My answer to this is that the dog is a carniverous animal and it is proved beyond doubt that animal food produces the largest quantity of these poisonous substances which it is our aim to destroy. Should it be possible to give a dog a large quantity of vegetables, he would undoubtedly be immune from a great many diseases which are now caused by the presence in his intestines of poisonous indols and phenols."

Experimented on Himself.

In the course of his studies, Professor Metchnikoff experimented upon himself to some extent as well as upon animals, and it is said that he inoculated himself with the new "glycobacteria." His theory as to the sour milk treatment may be traced in part to the environment of his youth. He was a Russian, born at Kharkoff, May 15, 1845. In that region and particularly in neighboring Bulgaria a surprisingly large portion of the inhabitants live to be centenarians, and Metchnikoff believes that their longevity was due largely to the fact that their diet included the bacilli of sour milk.

Following his education at Kharkoff, Metchnikoff studied at Giessen and Munich, and in 1870 he was appointed professor of zoology at Odessa. He held this post until 1882, when he resigned to devote himself to private researches into the anatomy of invertebrates. It was while working at lowly organized forms of life, such as sponges, that he first made the observations which constituted the basis of all his subsequent work. In 1888 he had attracted the notice of Louis Pasteur, the founder of the famous Pasteur institute for the treatment of rabies in Paris, and he was invited to become one of Pasteur's associates. In 1895 he succeeded as the director of the institute, a post which he held to the time of his death.

Should Live to Be 150.

In his study of longevity, Prof. Metchnikoff came to the belief that it should not be uncommon for people to live to the age of 150 years. He found every indication that the human mechanism was calculated to last far longer than it actually does. His researches showed among other things that animals which had no large intestines, lived to an advanced age particularly birds which preserve their youth, agility and spryness to the end of their long span. In the case of human beings he found that even among those whose sufferings were terrible, there were few who wanted to be put out of their agony by death. They all wanted to live. "This," said Metchnikoff, "shows that death between the ages of 60 and 80 is not natural. It should not occur so soon. There is some cause for it, which should be discovered and remedied." If the normal specific longevity were attained by human beings he believed that old and not degenerate individuals would lose the instinct for life and acquire an instinct for death and that as they had fulfilled the normal cycle of life, they would accept death with the same relieved acquiescence as they now accept sleep.

On his seventieth birthday, 1915, Prof. Metchnikoff was presented with a golden book containing a number of the latest scientific researches, signed by men of science of the day. Although there was much controversy in the scientific world regarding his original ideas, he was fully recognized as one of the most eminent bacteriologists.

He was the author of a number of books, including "The Nature of Man," "Immunity in Effective Diseases," "Prolongation of Human Life," and "Optimistic Essays."

In 1908 the Nobel prize for medical research was divided between the late Dr. Paul Ehrlich, of Berlin, and Prof. Metchnikoff. The $20,000 which he thus received he devoted entirely to the furtherance of his scientific researches. Personally he was not well off, and throughout his long life sacrificed all but the plainest living necessities to the cause of science.

LAND CONCERN MEN INDICTED FOR FRAUD

Chicago, July 15.—Federal indictments charging fraudulent use of the mails were returned yesterday by a grand jury before Judge Carpenter, against four officials for the Florida Everglades Land company.

Two of the men indicted are Harold J. Bryant, general manager of the company, and William F. Greenwood, treasurer, with offices in the Westminster building, Chicago. The others are William A. Otis, president, and Percy Hagerman, vice-president, of Colorado Springs, Col.

Six Charges Made.

Six counts are contained in the indictment, three charging a conspiracy to devise a scheme to fraudulently use the mails in inducing persons to buy lands in the Florida Everglades, and three charging the actual use of the mails in furtherance of the alleged scheme.

The company was organized, according to federal officials, in 1909, to take title to 67,000 acres of land, for which it paid $2 an acre. The firm was capitalized at $275,000, most of the stock being held by the officials. The gross proceeds are said to have been about $1,000,000.

The property was divided, it is alleged, into 4,860 parcels, from ten to 240 acres each. The sales began in 1909 and in 1910 almost all of the land was disposed of. Contracts were made with the purchasers for an undivided interest in the property for $240 at $10 a month.

Draw Lots for Land.

An alleged auction was held in which the purchasers made unifor mbids of $240 each, the government charges, and then lots were drawn to allot the various parcels.

Contracts were sold by agents who received from $30 to $40 for each sale. The first installment is said to have been collected by the agent and subsequent ones through the mails.

The indictments charge misrepresentation through the mails concerning the provisions for drainage and reclamation, the fertility of the soil, the lack of need of fertilizer, freedom of the country from frost and th elow cost of clearing for cultivation.

About fifty persons are named in the indictment as having been defrauded in the alleged scheme. It is stated by federal officials that approximately 4,200 lost money on it.

CHICAGO SHRINERS WERE HOPPING MAD

Returning Pilgrims Delayed Many Hours When Their Boat is Libelled.

Chicago, July 15.—Seven hundred and fifty fighting mad Chicago Shriners spent part of last night on the steamship South American, tied up at the docks of the Grand Trunk railroad in Detroit. They were returning from the Buffalo conclave on the chartered boat when the captain called at the port to take on new firemen. The boat was libeled by Deputy United States Marshal Caldwell, and the joke is that the dozen libellants are Knights Templar.

About a year ago Detroit Knights Templar chartered the steamer to take them to the state conclave at Calumet. They all got sick with typhoid and ptomaines, they assert. Since then they have been "laying" for the ship, so when it called at Detroit, Marshal Caldwell—one of the sick a year ago—was on the job. A bond of $80,000 was demanded. Suits filed against the owners, the Chicago, Duluth and Georgian Bay Transit company, aggregate $73,000. The libel was based on these suits.

Marshal Caldwell was adamant. He said he didn't care if every potentate of Masonry was aboard he and his fellow Templars intended to have their revenge. Shriners, also, according to dispatches, put aside the brotherly love stuff long enough to express themselves more forcefully than elegantly over the action of the brother Templars. At a late hour the vessel was allowed to proceed on the owners' assurance they would give bond next week.

Five or six hundred Carranza soldiers are reported to be encamped across the river.

Estimates of the number of bandits reported moving toward the Big Bend vary from a few hundred to more than a thousand.

Berlin, July 15.—(By Wireless to Sayville).—The sinking of an Italian destroyer by an Austro-Hungarian submarine was announced in an official statement received here today from Vienna. It says:

"An Austro-Hungarian submarine on the afternoon of July 10 sank an Italian destroyer of the Indomito type.

"One of our naval air squadrons bombarded effectively military establishments and the railroad stations at Pada. The aeroplanes returned unharmed, although they were shelled heavily by anti-air craft guns."

The Indomito, laid down in 1912, was 239 feet long, displaced 680 tons and was armed with one 4.7-inch gun, four 15-pounders and two torpedo tubes.

CONSCIENCE AWAKENS AFTER 41 YEARS PASS

Unknown Man Sends $40 to Indianapolis Firm to Square Himself.

Indianapolis, July 15.—Rip Van Winkle, who slept for twenty years, had "nothing on" the conscience of a mysterious individual who can be known only as "A. B. C.," for after a period of at least forty-one years he paid a bill of $40 to the Pettis Dry Goods company.

The money was sent in the shape of four Canadian $10 bills from Montreal, and was inclosed in a printed note which read:

"This belongs to A. P. Pettis and Andrew Dickson. Please give half to each or their heirs. (Signed.) A. B. C."

As it was prior to 1875 that the New York store was owned by Pettis, Dickson & Co., it is evident that this "conscience fund" contributor is settling for some funds taken, or a debt contracted, at least forty-one years ago.

The letter and its contents were received by George A. Gay, president of the New York store, who credited the account of Mr. Pettis and sent one-half the proceeds to George M. Dickson, general manager of the National Motor Vehicle company, son of Andrew Dickson. Mr. Dickson after receiving the money said he would give it to his mother as the proper recipient. Part of the letter from Mr. Gay to Mr. Dickson is as follows:

"Whether or not the world is getting better I do not know, at any rate the inclosed letter would indicate that it is. This party, whoever he may be, is apparently anxious to rectify a wrong. He has been forty years thinking it over, but better late than never. It is not unusual for us to have conscience money returned, but we have never had any money returned after such a long lapse as this. This money will enable you to enlarge your plant again and continue the prosperity which I understand your company is now having and which I have no doubt is largely due to your efforts."

ARABIANS IN REVOLT AGAINST TURK RULE

Turkish Resistance at Mecca Has Entirely Ceased, Says Report.

London, July 15.—The revolt against Turkish rule in Arabia is making progress, having resulted in the complete wiping out of all traces of Turkish resistance at Mecca, according to a Reuter dispatch from Cairo today.

After the fall of Mecca on June 13, says the dispatch, certain elements of the garrison continued their resistance in forts near the city. In order to avoid blood shed the grand sheriff, in command of Arabian forces, suspended attacks. The forts have now surrendered, according to today's advices, the captures of the Arabians including 28 officers, 950 unwounded men, 150 wounded, four guns and a large quantity of material and munitions.

Since the proclamation of Arabian independence the total captures of Turks include ten field pieces, ten mountain guns, 15 machine guns, 100 officers, 2,500 soldiers and 150 civil functionaries.

HOME RUN KING INJURED.

New York, July 15.—Third baseman J. Franklin Baker, of the New York Yankees, will be out of the game for at least a week as the result of an injury Friday.

Baker crashed into a grandstand gate while going after a foul in the fourth inning of the second game with Detroit and was so badly shaken up he was forced to quit. After an examination the club's physician said that, while no bones were broken, Baker would not be able to play for a week.

The local club now has three stars—Maisel, Baker and Gilhooley—out of the game because of injuries. Catcher Nunamaker is out under an indefinite suspension.

"VET" GROOMS PETER MAC TO TROT IN 2:00; FACES TEST IN OHIO STATE EVENT.

HOW BIG CIRCUIT NAGS SPEND DAYS.

5 A. M.—Is curried and given breakfast of two quarts of well crushed oats.

7:30 A. M.—Worked out. Is driven fast one day a week. Goes 15 miles—five times by stopwatch—rest of distance being used in practicing scoring. One day a week worked slowly 15 miles. Others just jogged five miles.

9 to 10 A. M.—Returned to stable; given hot bath, rubbed with liniments and bandaged.

Noon—Has dinner; two quarts of well crushed oats. Has all the hay it wants all day and night. Afternoon, rests in stall.

6 P. M.—Supper—two quarts of oats and two quarts of bran mixed with water and salt into a "bran mash." This is the treat of the day. Has three-gallon pail of water during day.

7 P. M.—Grassed for twenty minutes on clover. Brought back to well strawed stall. Sleeps about five hours a night; sometimes during day. Many horses sleep standing up and lie down only a few minutes at night.

Will Peter Mac (2:03¼) be the first two-minute trotter?

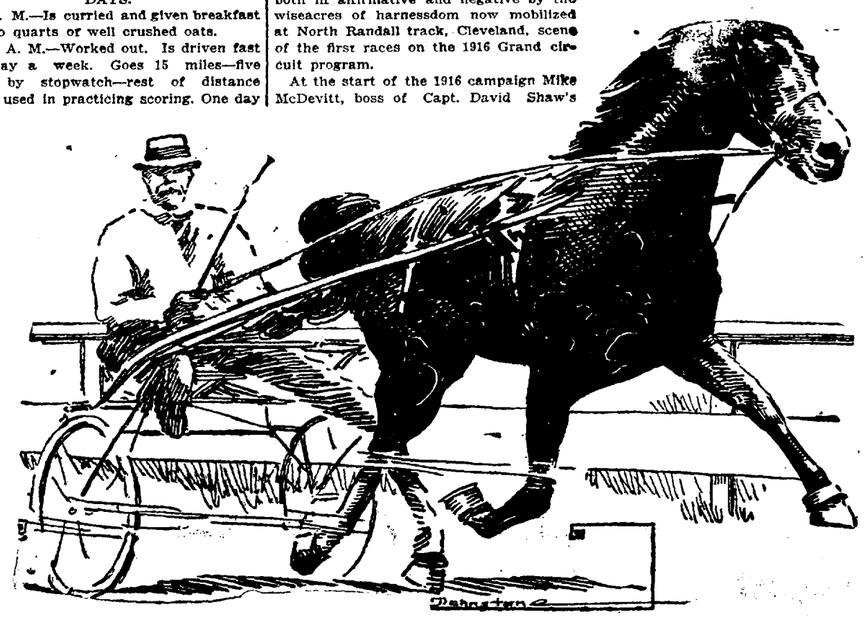
At the start of the 1916 campaign Mike McDevitt, boss of Capt. David Shaw's stable, and driver of Peter Mac, ventured the opinion that the sensational trotter would hit the two-minute mark in actual competition.



TRAINER MIKE M'DEVITT DRIVING PETER MAC IN PRACTICE WORKOUT.

But Peter Mac dislikes to, according to the railbirds who have watched his daily workouts. The speed marvel is not training just as desired and many believe he will not prove the same kind of race horse as he has a time performer.

McDevitt has been working his flier with hood and blinkers and devoting hours each morning to schooling the son of Peter the Great in the art of scoring. If Peter Mac overcomes this fault he'll be the most feared starter on the big line.

Handled by an amateur the Cleveland stepper made his mark of 2:03¼ last season. With a professional pilot in the rig behind him Peter Mac is expected to prove two seconds faster. Recently he was clocked 2:06¼, and experts say, had he tried, McDevitt's trotter could have stepped in 2:05.

There is no doubt but that Peter Mac is touted higher than any other stake horse tha thas ever appeared. He has never started in a race and no trotter yet to take the plunge into money competition has accomplished the feats credited to the Cleveland racer.

If Peter Mac delivers, and Clevelanders say he will, Tommy Murphy is in for some tough sledding. For years Tommy has been the leading money winner. Last year he salted away $128,420. Peter Scott (2:05½) bringing in more than $50,000.

McDevitt says the other stake candidates are going to find the pickings rather thin on the Grand circuit this summer. If "Mac" falls down as a prophet his prestige as a driver will suffer a slump.

SOX SNARE TWO KIDS.

Norfolk, Va., July 15—Ed Sicking, third baseman, and Maurice Craft, pitcher, both of the Norfolk club, were today purchased by the White Sox for $2,000 each, delivery to be made at the end of the Virginia league season. The deal was closed by Ted Sullivan, former White Sox scout, who came from his home forty miles from here, to look the players over for Comiskey.

Both are youngsters, Sicking playing his first year in professional baseball, and Craft his second. Neither is yet of voting age. Craft has won five games, lost two, besides aiding in other victories by pinch hitting. Sicking is batting around .300.

BLACKBIRDS EXPECT HARD BATTLE SUNDAY

The Huntington aggregation will clash with the Blackbirds Sunday at League park and a large attendance is desired by the management as the reduction of prices was made so all could see the games. The management is trying to give the people of Fort Wayne high-class semi-pro ball at the lowest possible price.

The new scale of prices which will start tomorrow and continue the balance of the season, giving men a covered bleacher seat for 15 cents and boys the same for 10 cents, is giving the fans a run for their money. For an additional 10 cents a grandstand seat may be obtained. Ladies will be taxed 10 cents at the gate but will be admitted free to the grandstand.

The Huntington aggregation is backed by W. F. Schacht, a prominent Lime city manufacturer, who will be with the team Sunday. The Blackbirds have played one game with Huntington this season, winning 4 to 0 in a fast game. Since then Huntington has added considerable weight to their lineup and are coming confident of a win. In the game played earlier in the season only one Fort Wayne player reached third base until the sixth inning, when hits by Chambers and Hillinger won the game for the Blackbirds. The game will start at 3 o'clock Sunday, with Frank Farnan doing the officiating.

IT'S VERY MUCH LIKE WORLD'S SERIES CLASH

Promptly at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon the Bowser and the Electric works teams were scheduled for the big clash at League park which is to break the long tie in the shop league race in Fort Wayne.

The winners of today's struggle will play either the Turners or Western Gas teams next Saturday. Both teams are in the best of shape and are confident that they will win.

Boosters of both teams have made preparations that resemble a world's series rooting crowd. Plenty of noise and good natured rivalry will be demonstrated.

WELSH TO ENGAGE IN 20 ROUND BOUT

Half a Million Dollar Club is Hunting for Suitable Man.

Denver, Col., July 15.—Freddie Welsh, world's champion lightweight, definitely has acepted an offer of $17,500 for a twenty-round decision battle for the championship before the Colorado Springs Athletic club, known as the Hundred Million Dollar club, on Labor day. An opponent will be selected from this list: Charlie White, Benny Leonard, Ever Hammar, Johnny Dundee.

It was first reported Friday that Welsh had signed articles, and he would have signed them but for the fact he was compelled to catch a fast train for San Francisco to bid good-by to his sister, who sailed for the Malay peninsula.

Club Ready With Guarantee.

The articles will be signed upon the deposit of a guarantee, which will be accomplished upon Welsh's return. The club officials were prepared to put the money in the bank Friday, but all arrangements could not be made before Welsh left.

The purse offered by the club for the bout is $20,000. Today's proposition made to Welsh is far more liberal than previous demands of Welsh, who formerly had asked $13,500 with a privilege of the gate receipts.

Under the present arrangements the club takes all the chances. Any receipts above the amount guaranteed to the champion and to his opponent will go to the club.

White Probable Choice.

The right to choose the opponent rests with the club instead of with Welsh. This provision was inserted because of the fact that Welsh is scheduled to meet Charlie White, of Chicago, who normally would be the choice in a no-decision battle at Minneapolis July 21. While it is not anticipated that there will be any definite result from this bout, it is impossible to tell what will happen in a fight, and White may be eliminated.

"They say that I am afraid of White and I have dodged him time and again. As a matter of fact, I know that White is a good man, and I do not propose to meet him in a twenty-round battle until I am well paid for the fight. The Colorado Springs club is the first one which has definitely agreed to meet my demands without quibbling, and my first choice for the bout will be Charlie White.

Can Outbox White.

"I recognize White as both the most dangerous and the least dangerous man I would have to meet. He is dangerous because he possesses the knockout punch; not dangerous because he is not skilled as a boxer, and I could hold him off and run up a big margin of points on him.

"Next to White I would pick Dundee and Leonard as the only men who are really entitled to a go for the championship now. Joe Mandot is not going as well as he was, while Johnny Griffiths is too heavy.

"As far as the weight goes, while I am not prepared to talk definitely about that yet, I know that I can fight better where I have to make weight than where I go in at catch weights, as I have to get in my best shape in order to reduce."

MAY CAGE WILD FANS.

Brooklyn, July 15.—Wild fans infesting the 50 cent bleachers at the Brooklyn league park may be forced to view the daily pastime hereafter from behind screens. President Ebbets, incensed over the rowdy action of cash customers who recently attacked Umpire Byron, has threatened to take this action if the fans cut loose again.

CANCEL ELGIN RACES.

Elgin, Ill., July 15—A decision to abandon the 1916 Elgin road races was reached Friday at a meeting of the Chicago Automobile club and the Elgin Road Racing association. The first races were staged in 1910 for the Elgin National and the Chicago Automobile club trophies.

One Minute Talks with Ballplayers

CLARENCE ROWLAND, MANAGER CHICAGO WHITE SOX:

"We are still in the fight and have a great chance to win the pennant, but we realize that the Yankees and Red Sox must be beaten before we can get into the world series.

"I agree with my players in the opinion that the Cleveland club will become anchored because they lack the necessary pitching strength. Detroit is similarly handicapped, but the Yankees and Red Sox are wonderfully strong in the box. So are the White Sox for that matter, and as the race progresses it will be a battle of pitchers all the way to the finish.

"I still admit that the White Sox have one more spot on the pitching staff to fill, but we have much strength in the other positions that we expect to remain factors for the rest of the campaign."

JEAN DUBUC, DETROIT TIGERS:

"I've been Ty Cobb's roommate for a long time and it gets my goat whenever I hear people making unjust criticism of his methods on the field. A fairer, cleaner or better ball player than Ty never lived.

"He's human, remember that, and that's why he is so well liked. When he has a great day with the stick he's happy and when a slump spreads over his hitting he bucks and rlies and that's why he doesn't stay in a slump.

"This thing of licking all the rest of the league in batting every year is no more than the sentiment exists in the

Chocolate Souffle.

Melt two tablespoons of butter and two tablespoons of flour and add gradually a cup of scalded milk. Melt two squares of chocolate in a double boiler, add one-half cup of sugar and two tablespoons of hot water. Stir until smooth. Combine the two, add the well-beaten yolks of three eggs; allow the mixture to cool and then fold in the whites of three eggs beaten stiff. Add one teaspoon of vanilla. Turn the mixture into a buttered baking dish and bake in a moderate oven for twenty-five minutes.

Cream Tomato Soup.

One quart can of tomatoes. Strain through a colander, getting every bit but the seeds. Add an equal quantity hot water, a pinch soda, and a grated onion. Let boil and skim, then add slowly one tablespoonful cornstarch dissolved in half a cup of sweet cream; season with salt to taste and as much cayenne pepper as you can get on point of knife. Serve hot with slice cut from bread and toasted in the oven. This is very nice if rightly made.

Apple Canapes.

Cut bread in one-eighth-inch slices, shape with a round cutter and saute in butter until delicately browned. Pare and cut apples in halves; then remove cores, thus making cavities. Saute apples in butter, cavity side down, in a covered pan. When apples are half done, turn, fill cavities with sugar and continue the cooking until apples are soft. Place on prepared bread and serve with cream sabayon sauce.

To make Sauce—Beat the yolks of two eggs and one tablespoon sugar until light. Heat a half cup cream to boiling point and pour slowly, while beating constantly, on egg yolk. Add one teaspoon of apricot brandy and cook, stirring constantly, three minutes. Strain.

Clam Chowder.

Wash fifty clams thoroughly and put them in a pot with half a pint of water; when the shells are open they are done. Take them from the shells and chop fine, saving all the clam water for the chowder. Fry out a large bowl of salt pork, cut up fine, and when the scraps are a good brown take them out and put in a large bowl of chopped onions to fry. They should be fried in a frying pan and the chowder kettle be made clean before they are put in it. (The chief secret in chowder making is to fry the onions so delicately that they will be missing in the chowder.) Add a quart of hot water to the onions, put in the clams, clam water, and pork scraps. After it boils add a large bowl of potatoes cut into eighths of original size and half a can of tomatoes, and when they are cooked the chowder is finished. Before it is taken up thicken with a cup of cracker crumbs and add a quart of milk. No seasoning is needed but good black pepper.

Maple Carmel Nut Cake.

Take half a cup of butter, one and a half cups sugar, one cup of lukewarm water, three cups of pastry flour, one cup of chopped English walnuts, whites of four eggs, two rounding teaspoons of baking powder. Beat the butter to a cream and gradually add the sugar, beating well. To this slowly pour in the water, then sift in the flour, a little at a time, beating well, reserving half a cup of flour to mix with the nuts, which now mix into the butter. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth and add the last thing with the baking powder. Grease well a long, shallow pan or line with greased paper, pour in the batter and bake in a moderate oven for 30 minutes or until done. Much depends on the depth and size of the pan. Cover with maple caramel and English walnuts. When ready to serve, cut into squares, a nut in the center of each square.

Beefsteak Chowder.

Cut a generous pound of round steak into strips an inch and a half long and half an inch thick and wide. Cut a two-inch cube of fat salt pork into tiny bits, and cook in a hot frying pan, with an onion sliced very thin. When the fat is fried out of the pork and the onion is browned, add a quart of boiling water. Let simmer five minutes, then pour the whole over the piece of steak. Bring the contents of a saucepan quickly to the boiling point. Let boil five minutes, then simmer until the meat is tender. Have ready four or five potatoes, pared, cut in slices, scalded in boiling water, drained and rinsed in cold water. Add the potatoes with salt and pepper to the meat. Add also, if needed, boiling water to cover the potatoes. Cook until the potatoes are tender. Then add a cup and a half of thin cream or rich milk and additional seasoning if needed. Split half a dozen crackers, and arrange them in the soup tureen. Pour over them the chowder and serve at once.

FIND HEALTH IN DIVERSION

BY MRS. McCUNE.

IN these days when women are taking up so enthusiastically the life of real usefulness, it is necessary that they look closely to the things which make for good health and sound mentality.

No woman can afford to allow herself to get into a routine, for herein lies danger both to the mental and physical life.

The woman who has her living to make, the housewife with multifarious calls upon her energy, or the woman who, though financially independent, still chooses an active place in the hive of the world's workers, must make the best of her hours of rest and recreation; they should be used in their highest sense to recreate.

No matter how delightfully engrossing and interesting one's work may be, nor how close to one's heart the duties chosen or given us may be, it is necessary to side-step into paths new and strange in order to bring about a real sense of mental and physical refreshment, a refreshment that will not only rest and invigorate, but will stimulate to fuller activity.

Perhaps to the really busy woman, the week-end trip cannot be over-estimated. In hundreds of cases this can be taken with little or no expense and any effort required is more than compensated for by the return in improved health and vigor.

Where the hostess does her own work or employs but one maid, a real pleasure should be found in assisting with the duties which the routine work of a home, even on Sundays, calls forth.

A hostess will more heartily enjoy her guest and feel that she is really entering into the spirit of her home life, if a pleasant interest is shown in the duties and attention that the care of the home requires.

Probably the chief value of the week-end trip is to get away from one's customary environment, to secure a change of mental contact and to find the refreshment and rest which can come from a complete transfer of interest.

Asdie from the week-end visit there are other paths open for diversion. Even the day trip to some neighboring park with daintily packed luncheon to lessen the expense is not to be despised.

What could be more refreshing to the tired housewife who has daily a hundred and one calls upon her time, than to start out after an early breakfast, with a box luncheon, and to feel that for a whole day she can rest under wide spreading trees, where eyes and brain are relieved by the absence of city sights and noises, and where the soft green brings a sense of peace?

It is a pity that the average housewife does not realize the physical and mental strength to be derived from a trip of this kind, and where there are children it is invaluable.

The average child is not only happy, but good, when allowed to roam at will in broad fields where flowers may be freely plucked and where they can play unhampered.

Some women contend that the trouble of preparing for a trip of this kind robs it of much of its pleasures. If this is the case, is it not because there is an exaggerated idea of the needs of the trip?

A simple lunch, sandwiches, fruit and cake, which can be eaten from a box, with perhaps a cup of hot coffee, tea or cocoa from a thermos bottle is all that is needed, and what could be more nourishing, simpler or easier of preparation than this?

The writer knows from personal experience, having packed many lunches of this sort for a day's outing (including both lunch and supper), that it does not take much time, thought or worry. The difficulties of preparing for a trip of this kind are really almost infinitesimal when one considers the splendid return to be reaped in health and renewed spirits.

For the one who does not care for pastoral life, desiring more to be "on the move," finding in this form of recreation greater rest, there are innumerable trolley trips, river rides or walking trips, such bringing its quota of beneficial pleasure.

The chief thing to keep in mind is to make this week-end recreation one that will bring us the greatest return physically, and to bring us a real change from the duties that call us through the week.

Close-fitting hats and extra puffs and braids cause the hair to perspire and do not allow the air to circulate through it to the roots. Lack of air is responsible for so much poor hair among city women. There is no hair tonic that equals nature's.

MANY women exhaust their system by not taking daily care of their health. Those who are troubled to know how to proceed should take a tablespoonful of olive oil daily. It is good for the skin, the digestion and the liver, making them do their work well. Fill a wineglass partly with water, then put in the oil and more water, gulp it down and you will not taste it. Get the best olive oil that is to be got. This is a treatment that may not suit everybody—it does suit most people; but ask your doctor, because he may know of some bodily peculiarity that might make it disagree. There is no treatment that will suit everybody, but in nine cases out of ten those who follow this advice will testify to its wisdom and will be quite astonished as the result. It makes you vigorous, brisk and not overburdened.

MENUS FOR SUMMER

THE housewife must remember that the appetite needs to be tempted in warm weather and that, in the interest of health, a meal must be carefully balanced.

Pork, beans, potatoes, rice, creamed cabbage, heavy puddings, etc., are not well adapted to hot weather diet. The requisite amount of starch, sugar and fat can be introduced in a more tempting and digestible form. For example, if the day is very warm and your dinner contains meat that is rich in protein and vegetables and a cold soup that are high in water, supply the fat in a salad oil—a salad with a mayonnaise dressing is tempting even in hot weather—and the starch in some vegetable such as peas or green beans. This will give you a balanced ration that will not appear heavy and will be palatable even in the hottest weather.

Mousses, iced coffee with whipped cream, stewed fruits with cream, and cream soups, offer pleasant means of introducing cream in the hot weather menu. Oil can be introduced in either French mayonnaise or tartare dressings; and good butter, like good wine, needs no bush.

ESSENTIALS FOR BEAUTY

Many New Hints for the Toilet.

FRESH air is as necessary to the health of the hair as it is to the health of the lungs. The woman who is not guided by this truth has hair which, as a rule, is "matted down" and of an unattractive shade. The outdoor girl, whose hair is blown about by the wind and kissed by the sun, is full of life and vigor, and its coloring is fine.

Fresh air and plenty of brushing with the shampoo and gentle massaging of the scalp will often make "sickly" hair healthy.

Brush the hair for five minutes every night and massage the scalp briefly with the tips of the fingers. Then let the hair hang down unplaited until ready to get into bed.

In the morning, while preparing to dress, again let the hair fall loosely. On balmy days stand at an open window so that the breeze may blow the hair about and the sunshine warm it. In cold weather stand in the sunshine for a short sun bath.

When motoring or playing golf you should dress the hair loosely that it may have the benefit of the airing. At the seashore let it hang loosely in the sun for a few minutes each day. This treatment naturally bleaches the hair slightly, but after a few weeks in town it goes back to its true shade; and the wholesome effect upon it of the sun more than compensates for the temporary bleach. For a blond this treatment is especially effective; it maintains the fairness of the hair as nothing else will.

Among my acquaintances is a young woman whose hair is full of golden tints. I asked her how she managed this. She explained that each summer she spends from eight to ten weeks at the seashore, and while there never wears a hat.

"By the end of the summer my hair is very dry, but it is well aired and sunned and bleached," she added. "It is a simple matter to restore its oils. Plenty of massage and shampoo, and some brilliantine rubbed on the ends of the hair to keep it from breaking—this will do all that is required."

ODDS & ENDS

USE lime water for thread worms. When solutions of common salt are found to be irritating and another remedy is wanted one may have recourse to lime water. It is to be used in the same way as the salt solution.

BEFORE mending stockings with ordinary darning yarn it is a good plan to hold the skein or card over the spout of a kettle of boiling water. By this means the steam effectually shrinks the wool and when the stocking is sent to the wash there will be no fear of the mended portion shrinking away or tearing the surrounding part.

HOT baths will break up colds if one is willing to go through the discomfort attendant upon such treatment. For this process one gets into a tub in which the water is at a comfortable temperature, but from then until getting out more water of a higher temperature is constantly added. When leaving the water one goes immediately to bed, piling the surface with blankets and lying between two. To drink a glass of hot lemonade increases the tendency to open the pores and by the next day the cold should be gone. One must always go to bed after a hot bath, for the body is then most susceptible to cold.

USEFUL and pretty pincushions are made in the shape of an apple and covered with a silk tinted to represent the red and green of the familiar fruit. They are round and rather flat, giving a wide area to hold the pins, and they are stuffed with raw wool, which affords little resistance and does not pack so tightly as cotton. The strong threads sewn through the center of the cushion makes the depression on each side to represent the core, and all the finishing gathers of the silk are hidden under the green stem.

ACAUSE of much suffering is the height of imbecility expressed in the idea that shoes or slippers shorter or narrower than one ought to wear will make the foot look shorter. Nothing could be more obviously foolish, for short shoes are the short road to bunions and tight shoes are the sure road to corns, besides which a foot "spreading" over the edges of a shoe too small for it (as it will invariably do) is one of the most hideous things imaginable.

WHEN you are making clothes for the children, which you know will need letting down within a month or two, try putting a tuck on the wrong side of the hem. When this is ripped there will be hardly a trace of the makeshift and there will be no time wasted in ripping the hem, rehanging the garment and restitching the hem. Another good way to prepare for future lengthening of a dress is to make a rather wide hem, leaving it unstitched, and folding it up so that a second hem is formed. This is stitched, and when the dress becomes short is let out and the first hem stitched. This is a time-saving method of shortening a night dress or apron where very careful work would not be needed. An even length is kept without ripping or cutting.

Then—

Fancy a chap with clean-cut, handsome features—one whose shoulders are broad and who walks with the virile step of youth. Imagine him to be brilliant and cultured—then son of distinguished parents. Conceive him as chivalrous and courteous—symbolical of he whom we are proud to style the real American man.

Now—

Weave about these characters a romance as emotional as that of Romeo and Juliet, as soul-stirring as that of Pagliacci; add thereto the composite elements of fiery passion, sacrifice and devotion, and into your idyl of love inject antithetical comedy and tragedy.

After which—

Compare your phantasy with the story that follows—one that delineates one of the most remarkable "heart affairs" of the present generation. Eclipsing the vagaries of those sentimentally inclined, it proves beyond doubt that truth is stranger than fiction.

CALLED TO CAREER OF MERCY.

Four years ago Jane Taylor Clark—she of the peaches and cream complexion—arrived in Chicago to study medicine. She had just graduated from a New Jersey finishing school for girls, and though her family, well known in Newark social circles, wished her to remain at home, Miss Clark felt the call of a career.

"I do not care to be a ballroom butterfly," she said. "I have a pleasing voice, a talent for dramatic art and a desire to assist in alleviating the sufferings of humanity. This latter appeals most strongly to me. I shall be a doctor."

She engaged a room in a medical students' boarding-house, bought some text-books and began to delve into the mysteries of anatomy.

And then came romance—with a capital R.

In the same boarding-house lived Walter Raleigh Johnson, a senior interne at a near-by hospital. Like Miss Clark, he came of a family wealthy and socially prominent—a family whose name had long been associated with the thriving city of North Yakima, Wash. And, too, like Miss Clark, he had pledged his life to curing the ills of afflicted mankind.

The day after the girl's arrival in Chicago she met Walter Raleigh Johnson, and because he was chivalrous and courteous (heir, as it were, to the virtues of his illustrious namesake) she fell in love with him before she had learned the difference between the tarsal and metatarsal bones. And from developments that followed it appears the "case" was mutual.

WHEN LOVE KNOCKED AT THE DOOR.

One evening young Johnson returned to the boarding-house to find Miss Clark ill. A physician gravely sat at her bedside.

"Appendicitis," said the doctor. "Bad case—very bad. We must operate at once."

Miss Clark overheard.

"Then take me to Raleigh's hospital," she said. "I want him to be near."

They did take her to "Raleigh's" hospital and he rode in the ambulance with her. As they wheeled the patient into the operating-room the interne leaned over and pressed a kiss upon her lips.

"Be brave, little girl," he said.

Young Johnson assisted in the operation, and when it was finished he requested permission to take charge of her case.

"You are in love with Miss Clark?" was asked.

"Yes," replied the interne.

"Good! Her condition is extremely critical—you realize that. Science has done all that it can for her. You must do the rest. If she recovers it will be in answer to the call of love. There's a hard fight ahead of you, my boy, so pitch in—and win!"

For three weeks the fires of life burned low. At the bedside of the girl labored the young doctor, administering to her every need, strengthening her, sustaining her by the mysterious power of love. And in the days that followed a coral pink crept into the pale cheeks and the eyes of the patient shone with a new light—slowly she came from the Valley of Death.

And then one evening the trained nurse left the room. Raleigh and Jane were alone. Kneeling down beside the bed and taking her frail hands into his, the doctor whispered a question as old as the first courtship.

"Yes," was the reply.

At the request of Miss Clark her mother, Mrs. Jane A. Clark, was not told about the critical illness until her daughter was well on the way to recovery. Walter Raleigh Johnson met Mrs. Clark at the depot when she came from Newark.

"I am in love with your daughter," he said. "She is in love with me. I am not going to ask you for Jane—she is mine, anyway. Did I not snatch her from the clutches of death—save her for myself?"

LOVERS LAUGH AT MOTHER.

True, no doubt, and Mrs. Clark was thankful to the heroic young doctor. "But—well, not just yet," she replied. "Later on, perhaps, you can marry Jane. You have not known each other very long, and—"

"Love laughs at locksmiths," 'tis said. And at mothers as well. When the girl was able to be about she and her betrothed hied themselves away to a minister and were married. Never a word did they say to "Mamma" Clark. The bride did not want to make her unhappy and the bridegroom did not want to make the bride unhappy.

"Did you ever have any other sweetheart?" the girl-wife asked the doctor one day.

"Bless you, no," he replied. "What puts such silly notions into your head?"

"I was just wondering, that's all,' said she.

Had the doctor been a bit more curious at his bride's question he might have learned that the previous day a pretty woman approached her on the street with anger in her eyes.

"Are you going to attend Dr. Johnson's graduation exercises?" she demanded.

THE THREAT OF DEATH.

"If you do—well, I'll kill you!" cried the woman.

Evidently she did not know of the couple's secret marriage. On the night of graduation Mrs. Johnson saw this girl in the hall—but she made no attempt to carry out the threat.

More of "the other woman" anon.

In August, 1912, the husband, now a graduate physician and surgeon, decided to practice in Johnstown, Pa., and made arrangements to move there. Thinking it unwise for the happiness of all concerned further to delay telling of her marriage, and still wishing to be near her husband, the young wife wired her folks that she was going to Newark for a vacation. Arriving there, she found Mrs. Clark had changed her mind about deferring the marriage until "a little later on."

"You can be married next month," she said. "It will be a pretty church wedding. Let's begin to plan now. Dr. Johnson is a nice young man and I shall be pleased to have him for a son-in-law."

The already-muchly-married girl was in a quandary. So was young Dr. Johnson when he received a letter apprising him of the surprising turn in events. They hesitated to confess having deceived the wife's relatives, and yet it never occurred to them that they could be remarried and still keep the previous wedding a secret.

In the meantime the bride's mother had sent out the announcements and girl friends had given her several showers. And to make matters worse, the old family physician, once an Episcopal clergyman, requested permission to "brush up" on the wedding ritual and perform the ceremony.

But—

It was not until sisters-in-law of Mrs. Johnson engaged in a spirited argument over whose little daughter was to be flower girl that Mrs. Johnson broke down and cried—and 'fessed!

AMAZED AT DISCLOSURE.

Of course it was an embarrassing situation. The announcements had to be recalled and explanation made to girl friends who had given the showers. The doctor's wife apologized to the family physician in person.

"Don't you worry, Jane," he said. "I'm not too old to appreciate a joke."

And that's the way every one looked at it. Dr. Johnson hastened to Newark to meet the family and friends of his wife, and soon afterward took her back with him to Johnstown.

The doctor's gold-lettered "shingle" didn't seem to bring much business, so he and his wife moved West to Tacoma, where they lived from January in 1913 to February in 1914. Then Dr. Johnson was offered a position as assistant pathologist at the Kankakee Insane Asylum at Kankakee, Ill. He accepted.

Walter Raleigh Johnson, physician and surgeon, who saved the life of a pretty girl "medic" and then married her. It was a beautiful romance, but, oh, what a sad ending!

"But I must go there alone," he told Mrs. Johnson. "Only single men can qualify for the position, because no quarters are provided at the institution for families. I told them I had been married, but was separated from my wife."

LETTERS BREATHED OF LOVE.

So it was agreed that while Dr. Johnson was earning a reputation at Kankakee his wife should take vocal instruction at the Valparaiso (Ind.) University. They would not be far removed and once a week could manage to meet each other.

The couple wrote daily letters that breathed of love and sentiment—and planned for the future. For instance, this from the pen of Dr. Johnson:

"I think I'll get a cello and practice on it, so that I can play with my darling when she gets through. No, don't think of any other instrument, because I'm 'Jack of all' myself, and our children, sweetheart, can get all they want of brass music from their dad. Only I thought it would be sweet if their mamma could play and sing sweet lullabys with them and for them. It would be a better influence and sweeter than anything else that my darling could do."

But the couple was never destined to have the children referred to so sentimentally by the doctor, for—well, let Mrs. Johnson tell you why in her own words:

"He came to visit me at Valparaiso on Aug. 17—his birthday—and we were, oh, so happy. Little did I know that it was to be our last meeting. When he returned to Kankakee wrote me the loveliest letters and promised to see me again on Sept. 15.

"I waited at the depot for hours that night expecting him to come. When the last train had pulled out I received a message. It stated that Raleigh had left Kankakee suddenly and gone to Tennessee. I never heard from him again.

"I could not reason why he should treat me the way he did. We had never had a cross word—he seemed to love me so. And then suddenly I remembered the threat the woman made shortly before Raleigh's graduation. And, too, I recalled a postal card she had once written to my husband and which in a careless moment he had left lying where it came into my possession. Naturally, I could only believe one thing—that he had gone away with her.

"I became a nervous wreck and had to seek seclusion in a sanitarium. Thinking that my husband eventually would go to the home of his parents in North Yakima or that they would know his address, I wrote many letters, begging him to come back to me. But I received no answer. The letters I sent by ordinary mail never were returned, but those I sent registered were. I have one here. You may read it and judge for yourself how much I loved him—how willing I was to forgive him—how I longed to have him come back to me."

The letter follows:

"My Dear Hubby: Darling Raleigh, how is my boy—and where is he? It almost kills me to think of it, but it is six long months today since I waited in the station at Valpo for my darling hubby. Raleigh, what is it all about that you can't even write just a little sweet letter to help me in the long, lonely wait? But never mind, sweetheart, just remember that I love you, and can and will always wait until you can come and tell me all.

"Just remember that no one loves you, or has even been as honest and straightforward with you, as your wife Jane. Darling Raleigh, today is my birthday, and, oh, how heavy is my heart. When I say my prayers I ask God to give us health and strength to guide us right, so that you and I will soon be close in each other's arms. Oh, Raleigh, then I want to die—with your arms around me. If you just say 'Come' I can and will. You know nothing can keep me from you but death. God has spared my life again and I know it was for you—because I wanted to die."

DETECTIVES MAKE DISCOVERY.

"I put detectives on his trail," continued Mrs. Johnson, "and they learned that he was in North Yakima. He told the authorities out there that I could take no action against him, as he had procured a divorce on the grounds of cruelty!"

Tears came into her eyes.

"Cruel to Raleigh? It's a lie! A lie!"

So Calahan & Callahan, her Chicago attorneys, have set about to have the decree annulled on the grounds that Mrs. Johnson was never served with a notice of the suit.

Machine Measures Power of Unseen Guns

An Austrian scientist has discovered a way to make an enemy's guns betray their location, tell their number and register their caliber, and to do these things despite many intervening miles. Wonderful as this seems offhand, simple principles are involved and a mechanism long known is merely modified to fit it to new uses.

The seismograph has been employed for years to register the earth's tremblings due to a readjustment of the massive crust which forms its surface. Of late the seismograph has been made still more acute and earthquakes originating hundreds and even thousands of miles away have been felt by the apparatus and duly recorded in wavering lines upon the paper enveloping a revolving cylinder. In this way the relative intensity, the duration and the approximate remoteness of the disturbances have been automatically detected and registered.

But earthquakes are not the only things that make the ground vibrate, and the tremors are all of them apparently characteristic of their promoting cause. At least that is what Professor Belar has long believed, and recently he has perfected an apparatus for military service that proves him to have been right.

Early in 1907 this Austrian scientist worked out a plan by which the seismograph was to be used as an artillery detector, and the idea of thus finding out something about the foe appealed very strongly to the Austrian ministry of war. The matter was referred to the inspector general of artillery and some time later tests were undertaken at Gurkfeld. There Professor Belar actually obtained by his special apparatus a record of the vibrations propagated through the ground by the firing of heavy guns, and a means of getting a check on distances was secured by taking records at various ranges and with different kinds of weapons, thus acquiring visual standards by which to judge of the remoteness and of the caliber of the far-off guns.

Since then Professor Belar has been patiently developing his instrument, and now he has an outfit that can be carried about in a handbag. Those who have seen the apparatus in service declare that one familiar with the meaning of the records can tell at once what has occasioned the inciting vibration.

A street car makes its own peculiar autographic records, while a rumbling wagon or a field piece traversing a road or street leaves its identifying trace upon the sheet, and the jar due to firing a gun is found to be quite distinct from the tremors set up by the blow of an exploding shell upon the ground. This reverses the telltale performance, because it indicates how an Austrian projectile behaves and whether or not it has found its mark far off in the hidden distance.

Of course, the story is plain only to one familiar with the characteristic signatures of the different sorts of earth wave producers. But Professor Belar has produced a table of signs, and the ordnance officer is expected to know these.

In actual service the observer at the seismograph must be able to separate the earth shocks due to his own guns from those created by the enemy's batteries. This difficulty is got over by putting the seismograph man in touch with his own artillery by means of telephone or wireless so that he knows when the guns are to be fired.

For years back, and even now, Professor Belar has been in charge of the Laibach Observatory, where his work has been well nigh exclusively in connection with seismological problems. Laibach is something short of fifty miles from a part of the Austro-Italian battle front. There some of the greatest artillery duels of the world war have been fought and the big Italian siege guns have made the earth tremble so that the vibrations were picked up at far-away Laibach.

It happens, however, that the observatory at Laibach has been too remote to identify the character of the attacking ordnance, but at closer range, say within twenty-five miles of the firing line, niceties of detection are possible. It was for this reason that the Austrian scientist labored to produce an efficient and yet a compact instrument that would be relatively so light that it could be easily and speedily transported by hand from point to point.

FEROCIOUS PETER VASSILOW

Stolid Obedience of Giant Russian Peasant Changes Under Clean Life in the War; He Begins to Use His Mind, and the Awakening Is a New Menace to the Autocrats.

VERY little of the Russian peasant's part in the war leaks into the newspapers, either through the medium of the cable or in stories sent by those correspondents who were fortunate enough to get passports taking them along the battle lines and among the concentration camps of the czar's army. Mostly the peasant is expressed in terms of soldiers—generally in terms of killed and wounded. His is the part of working and fighting, not that of the glorious hero. The latter is pre-empted by the officers; the peasant, sometimes a semisavage and slow-thinking soldier, seldom, if ever becomes an individuality in this army.

He is a wonderful soldier, too. Notwithstanding the fact that he undoubtedly is slow-thinking and slow-acting, the Russian peasant has been whipped into one of the finest, stanchest, bravest soldiers of the European battlefields. It took hard work and a great deal of disciplining to accomplish this, for many of the men had to be taught the rudiments of decent living.

It was not long, however, before their brains reacted to the stimulus of the good, clean, active life, and they began to understand things and even to think and plan for themselves, and soon the good soldier appeared from the stupid peasant chrysallis—not a butterfly, like his officers, but an intelligent, thinking, reasoning, human being, possessing unusual strength and powers of endurance and an almost passive obedience to constituted authority. The educating and improving of the typical poor-class Russian always will be pointed out as one of the wonder accomplishments of the war.

Credit must be given to the men who accomplished this, but, also, much blame, for they failed to realize the completion of their tasks and have brought about conditions in the ranks of the army that are far from being ideal from any standpoint. The officer, accustomed all his life to lording it over the civilian in almost any country, has a certain contempt for the nonmilitary man. This was particularly true in Russia before the war.

The methods that were necessary to whip the man into shape added much to this contempt, and it soon became the custom for the officer to regard the man as simply a tool, like his sword or automatic—something to be taken care of because it might prove useful in emergencies, but which could be badly ill-treated and neglected without its making any protest.

The officers, secure in the belief that the peasant was merely an animal, treated him as one physically. He was kicked about at will, struck with the flat of swords, or even with the edge if the officer's temper led him to administer heavy punishment. He was beaten with rope ends; often after a long day's march he would have to labor all night at trench work, dinnerless, supperless, worn out with fatigue, lacking even drinking water, while the officer stood over him and cursed and beat him.

When there was but little to eat, all that went to the officer; the soldier could eat if he had anything, but if he didn't, that was no concern of his superior. From some of the regiments and army corps in the field tales of horrible punishments inflicted for light infractions of regulations or failure to accomplish an assigned task, or even for some imaginary fault, have sifted back with the returning wounded—those who are spoken of only in terms of thousands, whose individual entity has been swallowed up in the larger numbers of their brethren.

One is the story of Pieter Vassilov. Pieter was a giant, one of those huge men who tower above their surroundings, unconscious of their own great strength until some unusual event or emergency brings it into play in such a manner that it is brought home to them that they are unusual men. Blond he was, with a great shock of touseled hair, with blue-gray eyes, yet they were not the conqueror's eyes, for they were cloudy and shallow and lacked the "gaze of eagles." More than 6½ feet tall, with broad shoulders, his arm was like steel, his legs tireless.

For a while at the front things were bad. But when the authorities awoke to a realization of the fact that they couldn't have an efficient army unless care were taken of it and proper things provided at the time they were needed, matters began to improve, the standard of living became good, there were clothing and rations and munitions and officers forced the men to live according to the ordinary principles of decency and sanitary cleanliness, in so far as the latter could be carried out in the camps and trenches.

This was a new life for Pieter, just as it was a new life for the thousands of other peasants, his comrades, who accompanied him to the front. For a short time he rebelled at the new regulations; but soon he became accustomed to them, grew to like them. This was the beginning of a new life, the dawning of a new reason for Pieter, as it was for many others of the Russians.

This the officers of his command failed to appreciate. In fact, very few of the Russian officers did appreciate this change, that was taking place in many men throughout the army, and even to this day there are but few who will admit that the peasant soldier is anything but an animal or a fighting machine, that acts only at command and does no thinking for himself.

Now, it is one of the strange features of this war that, whereas a whole, live, soldier's life is counted as naught when considered in terms of attack or defense, the life of a wounded soldier is held as of great value, and unusual preparations have been made for the treating and care of the wounded. Being wounded, but still alive, Pieter had gained an added value in the eyes of his officers; so he was at once rushed to the field hospital, where emergency treatment was given him and then he was placed in a car, along with a lot of other wounded men, and rushed to a base hospital.

In the base hospital he received unusually kind treatment. Surgeons, nurses, Sisters of Mercy, all looked after the wounded, and he tasted then for the first time many dishes that were new to his palate. Under such treatment he could do nothing else but get well.

His recovery, however, was not rapid, nor was his life free from pain. It was many days before he could breathe properly, and many more before he could turn himself in bed without assistance. These days, usually long for the convalescent, were not so for him, however, for he employed his time in exercising to its utmost his new thinking faculty.

When he rejoined his command, Pieter found that it had moved from the trench lines occupied some months before and had advanced miles further, driving back the enemy in the grand sweep that was to end in the capture of strong Austrian fortresses.

He found conditions much the same, as regarded the daily routine, the mistreatment by the officers, the constant engagements with the enemy. He took part in several more mad rushes across the "No Man's Land," escaping always without injury and bearing his part well in the dangers of battle.

At last came a time when the force had penetrated so far into the enemy's country that the matter of obtaining supplies became difficult. Trains could not get through; rations were short, clothing had to last longer than formerly. Worst of all, there was an alarming shortage in the supply of powder and lead that interfered seriously with the operations of the army.

But Pieter, in his hours off duty when he was able to overcome the physical need of sleep and rest, noted in his wanderings towards that indefinite country known as "the Rear," that the Red Cross cars contiuued to arrive and depart with their former regularity, coming in daily empty and clean from the disinfecting they received at the base, to go back the same day, loaded with seriously wounded who could not recover in the little field hospitals. Pondering, he praised that custom of nations which respected the sign of mercy and permitted the injured man at least a small chance for recovery under right treatment.

Pieter was discussing this one evening with two or three of his comrades—men like himself who had learned to think and plan since the army life gave them an insight into the fact that they could do these things for themselves. Pieter was relating his experiences at the base hospital; telling how things were managed and why there was a shortage in the supply at the time. And his companions now and then interjected a remark or asked a question until the whole matter became clear to all of them.

"The generals should devise some way to get the food to the front," said one. "They are smart men and should be able to overcome such difficulties as the shell fire of the enemy places against them."

"But how can they?' another asked. This was the general question, "How can they?" It was the question those very generals themselves had been asking for several weeks "How can it be done?"

"Well," said Pieter, who long had been pondering this question, "they might load up these Red Cross cars that are coming to the trenches every day. If empty cars will come through because they have the Red Cross on them, there seems to me to be no reason why full ones wouldn't get here, too. They could mark the stuff medical supplies and put it in the Red Cross cars to fool the enemy and then we wouldn't have to be wearing ragged clothes and doing without our breakfast."

"Say that again, you." The voice was rough and commanding, but there was a certain note of surprised interest in it. Pieter, with the rest, jumped to his feet, his hand coming automatically to his cap in formal salute, for it was an officer who spoke.

For a moment Pieter was afraid that he had presumed to say something that might be forbidden. But, as the command was given again he repeated what he had just suggested to his comrades as a solution of the great difficulty facing the army. As he continued, the officer commanded Pieter to follow him.

Pieter advanced in the officer's footsteps, quaking inwardly. As they approached headquarters of his regiment, he began to feel that the punishment to be meted out to him might be very serious—death, in fact. Only one thing cheered him a little. His companions had not been arrested. So he followed the officer into headquarters and, after a little waiting, into the presence of the colonel and his staff.

The colonel heard it in silence, though there were expressions of surprise from the staff officers curiously idling about. He waved the soldier away, without a word; and Pieter, glad to escape from what appeared to him a precarious situation, hastily returned to his own quarters where he shut himself up after telling his comrades of the scene he had just played a part in.

Col. Valdimir Dubrowski said nothing about the incident at the time. But, the next day, when the entire staff was assembled he announced to them that he, personally, had discovered a sure and safe way of getting plentiful supplies of all munitions to the front and appointed one of them to carry a special dispatch to the general quartermaster's department with all speed. Pieter's plan was making headway.

Shortly afterwards, supplies, not only of food but ammunition as well, began coming to the camp in plenty. Red Cross cars carried them from the base. Col. Valdimir Dubrowski was mentioned in official statements as having rendered valuable service to the army and nation.

Pieter and his comrades were glad to get the plentiful food and new clothing. They said as much to one another, and all who had learned of Pieter's suggestion praised the giant generously. In camp, in the trenches, on duty and off, Pieter was a hero.

Three months later saw the command still at the same spot, still holding the lines against desperate attacks of the flower of the Teutonic armies, still receiving supplies in plenty. One day, a group of recruits stepped from a train at the rear; among them was a blond giant with clear blue-gray eyes, a proud bearing as one who is sure of his own ability; a man of wonderful physique, of dominant mentality.

He glanced around him with quick-seeing eyes. To the left, where the quartermaster's supplies were housed, on the precipice overlooking a river, a string of Red Cross cars were being inspected by an officer in the brilliant, glittering dress uniform of a general. That was a familiar figure to the giant so, being at liberty, he strolled towards the car through whose open door he could perceive piles of boxes that he knew contained rifle cartridges.

A look of rage and hatred passed across the face of the giant as he approached closer to the official group. With a tigerish spring he landed beside the inspecting officer; and Pieter Vassilov seized Gen. Vladimir Dubrowski about the middle and, with the strength of a Porthos, hurled him over the precipice.

Just when hands stretched forth to seize him as he fled, a terrific explosion shook the earth and rent the string of box cars to shreds. An aeroplane, floating about overhead, had dropped a bomb. The Germans had discovered the Russian trick of misusing the Red Cross.

Pieter Vassilov alone survived the group that had been near the cars.

NINTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

Lieut. Jarvis Hope is detailed by the United States naval board to investigate and report his findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke, which serves to bring the submarine to a state of perfection. The lieutenant arrives in Valdavia and is welcomed by the inventor and his daughter, Cleo. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat, a Japanese helper is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism of the ventilating device. Hope reports favorably on the new device but there are others interested in it. An attempt to burglarize Doctor Burke's laboratory fails, but later Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom. Cleo sells her father's books to get money; later she finds a note from which she learns that they contain the secret formula. With Hope she races to the auctioneer's store only to find it in flames. Olga Ivanoff and Gerald Morton, two spies in search of the formula, attempt to capture Cleo when she calls at the house of Stephanski, the anarchist. Hope rushes to her aid; Morton shoots at him but the bullet hits a bomb, in the cellar, which explodes. Stephanski dies in the wreck of his house; the others escape. Hope and Cleo attend a ball at Mrs. Delmar's, whose nephew has two of the missing books. Mahlin, a spy, attempts to steal the books, but is discovered by Hope; in the excitement that follows the books disappear. Mahlin escapes. Hope and Cleo take a boat for an island out in the bay. The conspirators follow in other boats. Mahlin and the Jap turn out the island light. Morton's boat with the countess strikes a stray mine in the bay. After a violent storm Hope and Cleo arrive on a strange island and discover that the man they hunt is there. But Mahlin and the Japanese also reach the island and put up a fight for the books. They escape from Hope but return and dynamite the shack. The conspirators fail to harm Hope and Cleo. They manage to reach Sandsboro, where Doctor Owen has one of the books. Each of the others approach the doctor, but he refuses to hear them. He arranges to meet Hope at the hotel with the book. Morton poses as Hope and but for an earthquake would have possessed the volume.

Though the earthquake caused considerable material damage to Sandsboro, partially wrecking the hotel, a bank, and several smaller buildings, but few casualties and no fatalities resulted. Within an hour Hope, Cleo, and Doctor Owen, their clothing still showing traces of dust and falling plaster, were seated about a table in the latter's study, poring over the book which Cleo had snatched from Olga during the panic in the restaurant.

"There's nothing in this one, either," said Hope disgustedly, as he turned the last leaf and slammed the cover. "That leaves six more books to look for. Things are narrowing down, in any event."

"Where do we go now, Jarvis?" asked Cleo.

"And where is Santa Eulalia?"

"It's at the southern end of the San Joaquin valley, Miss Burke," said the physician. "Right in the edge of the mountains. It's only a small place. You shouldn't have difficulty in finding your man there."

When Hope and Cleo descended from the branch-line local at Santa Eulalia late the following afternoon they found that they were, as Owen had said, in the edge of the mountains. Santa Eulalia is one of those rural communities where everyone is, or professes to be, familiar with the details of everyone else's business. In such towns there are three recognized fountain-heads of information: The hotel, the general store, and the barber shop, and, as the proprietor of the general store was also postmaster, it was to him that Hope, having settled Cleo in the only hotel that the town boasted, addressed his inquiries.

"Do I know Dick Patten?" repeated the storekeeper in response to Hope's question. "Well, I reckon I do. I've sold a heap of goods to Dick. He's outfitted with me for's much as fifteen years."

"What is his business?" asked Hope.

"Well," said the merchant reflectively, "I reckon you might call Dick a prospector and not be far wrong. At any rate, that's what he's been doing as long's I've known him. Never made a strike that I heard tell of, but he always has money to pay his bills. A queer fellow, Dick is. Quiet sort, fond of books, never talks about himself, seems to like his own company. He comes into town every two or three weeks, stays just long enough to get his mail and load up his burro with provisions, and then he's off for the mountains again. He takes a trip to 'Frisco once or twice a year and when he comes back he usually has a lot of old books with him. Gets 'em to read when he's off prospecting, I reckon. Come to think of it, he'd just got back from the city the last time I seen him."

"How long ago was that?"

"About a week—ten days, mebbe."

"Have you any idea where I could find him?"

"Not the least in the world, friend. Were you wanting to see him about something particular?"

"Yes," said Hope, "I want to see him very much indeed."

"Then the best thing you can do, friend," the storekeeper asserted, "is to sit right down here in Santa Eulalia and wait for him."

The Kern county fair had opened its gates and the people of the country for half a hundred miles around were pouring into Bakersfield in motor cars, in wagons, and on horseback, by trolley and by train. As four o'clock drew near, the crowd deserted these attractions and slowly drifted toward the field where Bob Smith, "the Daredevil of the Sky," was advertised to give his hair-raising and perilous aeroplane exhibition.

As Smith, a slim, wirily built fellow, clad in the leather garments of an aviator, was crossing the field from the hangar to his waiting aeroplane, he was hailed by a tall young man who, accompanied by a fashionably dressed woman, had, with considerable difficulty, pushed his way through the crowd.

"Hello, Bob!" hailed the stranger, evidently an Easterner by his dress, "don't you remember me now that you've become famous?"

"By Jove," exclaimed the aviator, running forward with outstretched hand, "if it isn't Gerald Morton! What on earth are you doing here?"

"Oh, I'm spending a few days down the valley, near Santa Eulalia," Morton replied, a trifle evasively. "I have a little business there that requires my attention. Let me introduce you to my friend, the Countess Ivanoff."

"Mr. Smith," continued Morton, turning to Olga, "is responsible for my interest in aviation. He taught me to drive a machine when he had a school on Long Island, two years ago."

"I didn't know that you could drive an aeroplane," said Olga in surprise.

"You bet he can drive, countess," said Smith. "If he hadn't gone in business with that rich uncle of his he could have made a living as an aviator. He's one of the few amateurs I know that I'm not nervous about riding with. Don't you want to go up with me now, Morton? I've got a two-passenger tractor."

"Do I want to ?" shouted Morton, as excited as a boy, "well, I should say I did. How about it, Olga? Do you mind waiting for me?"

"Not in the least," she answered. "Go, by all means. I'll wait for you in the car."

"Run over to the hangar, then," directed Smith, "and tell one of the boys to fix you up with a coat, and cap, and goggles. And be as quick as you can, Morton. It isn't good business for us professionals to let a crowd get too impatient."

Five minutes later, with Morton, goggled and leather-clad, seated beside him, Smith, signalling to his helpers that he was ready, threw on the power and the great propellers began to revolve, haltingly at first but rapidly gathering speed until their roar drowned out all other sounds. Smith threw over his starting-lever and the machine rolled forward across the turf, faster, faster, and then, in response to the depression of the planes, left the ground and soared, like a great white bird, into the air. For twenty minutes Smith performed his aerial maneuvers for the benefit of the multitude with strained necks and upturned faces a thousand feet below; then turned his machine in the direction of the mountains.

"Now," he shouted, putting his lips close to Morton's ear so that his words could be heard above the roar of the propellers, "the business part is over and we'll have a little pleasure spin."

Higher they climbed and higher, until the fair grounds and the city and the great plain of the San Joaquin lay spread below them like a map in bas-relief. Soon the plain below them merged into foothills and the foothills lost themselves in a wilderness of peaks and cliffs and canyons, and, almost before Morton realized it, they were hovering over the great San Bernardino range. Circling and swooping above the mountain tops like a gigantic hawk, Smith apparently found the spot for which he was looking, for he suddenly shut off the power and the machine began to volplane downward at appalling speed. So rapidly were they descending that it seemed as though the mountains were fairly leaping toward them. Morton, experienced aviator though he was, was frightened. "Something's happened to the engine," he thought. "We're in for a smash, for we can never make a landing on those mountains." Scarcely had the thought leaped through his mind when what had looked an instant before like a rocky and inhospitable mountainside resolved itself into a grass-covered mesa on which the machine landed as lightly as a bird.

2—Morton Abducts Cleo in an Aeroplane.
3—"I Want You to Marry Me," Said Morton.
4—Hook Was Beside Himself With Anxiety.

The mesa, or tableland, on which they stood apparently ended, a few hundred feet away, against a sheer wall of rock which rose skyward as abruptly as the side of a house. In the base of this cliff was a square, black hole, evidently the entrance to an abandoned mine, and near by stood a rudely built and dilapidated cabin. The cabin, he now saw, was built on a narrow shelf of rock; behind it rose the sheer cliff; before it was an abyss. It stood, indeed, on a veritable island in the air, and the only way to reach that island was by means of a wire cable which was stretched across the chasm. From this cable, red with rust, but apparently still strong, hung a sort of basket, roughly constructed, by means of which one could ferry himself across the river of space. "Great place for kidnapers or counterfeiters, eh? The police wouldn't find 'em here in a year of Sundays."

Morton had started toward the machine but, at Smith's remark, he turned and walked back to the edge of the chasm, where he stood staring at the cabin on the ledge, apparently lost in thought.

"The place seems to interest you," said Smith, laughing. "Thinking of opening up the mine?"

"No," said Morton thoughtfully, as he turned away, "but I have just thought of another way in which it might be made to pay."

"Bob," said Morton, as he and the aviator sat that evening at a table in a cafe, "what are you going to do after you have finished your engagement here?"

"I haven't any engagements ahead," Smith answered gloomily. "I'm thinking of taking a run east to see if I can't book a few dates."

"Going to take the machine with you?"

"No. Freight's too high and it's too much of a speculation. I'll leave it on the Coast until I get something."

"The trip you gave me this afternoon seems to have reawakened my enthusiasm for aviation," said Morton lightly. "I find that I shall have to stay around here for the next few weeks and I'd like to pass the time with something more exciting than golf. Why not rent me your machine? I'll assume all the risks and I'll pay you enough to make it worth your while. How about it?"

Morton and Olga fully realized that, as a result of their desperate but unsuccessful attempt to obtain possession of the book from Doctor Owen in the restaurant at Sandsboro, they had shown their hand and that, henceforth, they might as well play their game in the open. Recognizing that Hope and Cleo could have no object in continuing their search for the books had they discovered the lost formula in the one which Fitzmaurice had loaned to Doctor Owen, the two conspirators followed the naval officer and the girl to Santa Eulalia, where they learned, by a few inquiries, that Patten was prospecting in the mountains and that it was uncertain when he would return. As the hotel at which Hope and Cleo were staying was the only one in Santa Eulalia, Morton and Olga established themselves in the nearby town of Ellenville.

"It was that cabin on the ledge," he explained, "that gave me the idea. It's as remote and inaccessible as an island in the Arctic. Suppose we left the girl there for a week or two. I fancy she would then be willing enough to tell us anything she knows, eh? How does my plan strike you?"

"As far as it goes," said Olga, "it is admirable. You seem, however, to have overlooked one rather important detail. You tell me that this cabin is practically inaccessible. How do you propose, then, to get the girl to it?"

"By aeroplane," Morton exclaimed triumphantly.

On an afternoon early in the following week, Cleo, as had become her custom, was strolling along a quiet lane in the outskirts of Santa Eulalia. Today she was alone, however, for Hope had been called to Los Angeles on business, and Hook, seated on a cracker barrel, was entertaining the habitues of the general store with sea yarns. So completely absorbed in her thoughts was Cleo that she paid no attention to the large closed car, with drawn curtains, which rolled silently up behind her. Just as it came opposite her the door swung open, a man leaped out, a blanket was thrown over her head, muffling her screams, and she was dragged into the car, the whole performance being enacted in far less time than it takes to tell it. She struggled desperately to free herself from the enveloping folds, but unseen hands pinned her against the cushions while someone held a sponge, saturated with something that smelled sweet and sickly, over her nose and mouth. A few inhalations and her struggles ceased.

When Cleo recovered consciousness she found herself in a small and unkept room. Its walls, which were of unplaned boards, were covered with pictures cut from the illustrated papers; its furniture consisted of a small iron stove, much the worse for rust, an oilcloth-covered table, a chair, and the foul-smelling bunk on which she lay. In the chair with his back to her a man was sitting. She must have made some sound, for the man turned. It was Gerald Morton!

"So you're awake at last, my dear," he said, coming toward her. "How are you feeling?"

At sight of Morton she attempted to rise, but a wave of giddiness swept over her and she sank back upon the bunk.

"I feel ill," she moaned. "My head feels as though it were going to burst . . . where . . . where am I? . . . and what are you doing here, Mr. Morton? . . . have I had an accident? . . . has anything happened? . . . I can't remember."

"Nothing has happened—yet," said Morton coolly. "You're in a cabin in the mountains, my dear, and quite a lonely place it is, too."

"But how did I get here?" she asked, striving desperately to keep her composure.

"I brought you here," was the answer. "I wanted a quiet little talk with you where we would not be disturbed and this seemed just the place."

"I want you to marry me," said Morton, seating himself on the edge of the bed and attempting to draw her to him.

For an instant she gazed at him in mingled disbelief and anger, then sprang to her feet. The next instant he had taken her in his arms.

"And you're going to marry me, too, my beauty," he repeated, his breath hot upon her cheek, and he bent forward to kiss her, but, with a sudden movement, she wrenched herself free.

"Marry you?" she cried contemptuously. "Marry you, you cur, you cad? I wouldn't marry you if you were the last man left on earth!" and, as he again attempted to kiss her, she slapped him in the face.

"You little devil!" he snarled, livid with anger, "you'll kiss me now, and before I'm through with you you'll be glad to marry me," and he made as though to seize her, but, eluding his grasp, she reached the door, opened it, and fled with Morton at her heels. A hundred yards she ran blindly; then stopped abruptly, trembling with terror and excitement, for at her very feet a chasm yawned. But as her pursuer approached she turned defiantly.

"If you attempt to touch me, Mr. Morton," she said steadily, "I shall jump. I would rather be dead than have you lay a hand on me."

"Come, come, my dear," he said soothingly, as though he were talking to a frightened horse, "there's nothing to be frightened of. I'm not going to hurt you," and he cautiously advanced toward her a step or two.

"One step nearer," warned Cleo, in a strange, strained voice, "and I shall jump." And he knew that she would make good the threat.

"You need a chance to cool down and think things over," he said. "I suppose my proposal was a little sudden. So I'll just leave you here for a few days, my dear. You will find a basket of food on the table, and there will be no one to disturb you. It's a quiet, restful place—no one could find you here in a thousand years. Sure you won't change your mind and give me a kiss, my dear? No? Well, then, I'll be going. When I come back again I fancy that you'll be a little more cordial."

She saw him walk briskly along the edge of the cliff to a cable arrangement which, in her panic, she had failed to notice; saw him climb into a basket which was suspended from a pulley-wheel which ran upon the cable; saw him haul himself across the chasm by means of a rope, get out of the basket, detach it from the pully, and disappear with it behind the screen of bushes which lined the opposite cliff. A few minutes later she heard a sudden roar, as of a motor car with its muffler open, and before her astonished eyes an aeroplane soared skyward.

Having convinced herself that escape from the ledge was impossible save with assistance from outside, Cleo returned to the cabin, less worried than might have been expected, for she knew that Hope and Hook, once they discovered her absence, would move heaven and earth to find her. On the table was the basket of provisions brought by Morton. Continuing her investigations she discovered a cupboard which contained matches, candles, a bag of salt, some tins of fruit and vegetables, and a meal sack filled with what felt like books. Untying the string, she emptied the contents of the sack upon the floor—then gave a cry of astonishment and joy. For, amid the tattered dog-eared volumes, was one she recognized. It was a work on metallurgy—one of the dozen books which, since her earliest recollection, had stood on the shelf above her father's desk. She opened it with trembling fingers. Written in a firm, bold hand across the flyleaf was the name, "Richard Patten." By one of those coincidences which causes fiction to hang its head, Morton had brought her to the cabin of the very man for whom they were all searching. Now she recalled the storekeeper's description of Patten as Hope had repeated it to her: "A queer fellow . . . quiet . . . fond of books . . . has a cabin up in the mountains somewheres." And now, by a chance in a million, she had found Patten's cabin and the book. Slowly she turned the leaves, carefully scanning each in turn. But she found nothing. Disheartened, she was about to close the book, when, at the very foot of the last page, in letters so faint and minute as to be almost indistinguishable, she saw a line of writing, "Philosophy," it read, "p. 61, every seventh word." It was the key to the formula!

Three days dragged by—three days which, in that awful solitude, seemed like three years. The resources of the ledge Cleo soon exhausted; she cleaned the cabin; lighting a candle, she explored the abandoned mine working; she attempted to beguile the time reading the books which she had discovered in the sack, which proved, however, to be dry-as-dust scientific works; and every few hours she peered over the edge of the precipice in the faint hope that she might see someone in the canyon below. On the morning of the fourth day her patience was rewarded, for she saw two boys fishing in the mountain torrent which raced and roared along the bottom of the canyon. She called to them; again and again she screamed, but the distance and the noise of the river drowned her voice. Gathering a handful of pebbles, she stretched herself on the edge of the cliff and commenced to methodically bombard the boys below. A dozen pebbles she threw without attracting their attention, but at last, when she had almost abandoned hope, a pebble struck one of them on the shoulder. Whirling about to see where it had come from, he saw Cleo on the ledge, half a thousand feet above. He called to his companion and they both stood staring up at her. Frantically she beckoned to them, but they shook their heads; it was evident that they knew of no path by which to reach the ledge. She tried to call to them, but it was impossible to make them hear. Suddenly a thought struck her. Running to the cabin, she looked wildly about for pencil and paper, but could find neither. On the table lay the book which contained the code. Tearing out the flyleaf she lighted match after match, let them burn for a moment, blew them out, and, using the blackened ends in lieu of a pencil, scrawled her brief call for help: "Held prisoner by Morton in cabin on ledge in mountains. Come quickly. Cleo." Folding the sheet, she addressed it to Jarvis Hope, Shaftsbury Hotel, Santa Eulalia. Now her problem was how to get the message to the boys below, for, should she let it flutter down, it would, in all probability, be carried away by a gust of wind, and, if she tied it to a stone, it might plunge into the river and be lost. All at once there came to her the recollection of an amusement of her childhood. With her handkerchief and a piece of string she made a miniature parachute, such as children use, weighted it with a small stone, and tied to the stone the message. Returning to the cliff, she first held up the parachute for the boys to see, then tossed it out into space. Almost instantly the handkerchief billowed out, thus checking its descent, and it sailed gently downward into the boy's upstretched hands. She could see them slowly deciphering the ill-written message, and then glance up at her again, whereupon she gestured frantically that they were to take it to the town. They quickly caught her meaning and, giving her a wave of encouragement, started down the canyon on a run.

Hope did not return from Los Angeles until the day following Cleo's disappearance. He was met at the railway station by Hook, who, almost beside himself with anxiety, told him the news. He wired to Los Angeles for detectives. Stirred by Cleo's youth and beauty and the mystery which enveloped her disappearance, posses of cowboys and citizens scoured the surrounding region, afoot and on horseback and in automobiles.

It was on a Monday afternoon that Cleo disappeared. Shortly before noon on Friday two panting boys, their dust-grimed faces streaked with rivulets of perspiration, burst into the hotel in Santa Eulalia.

"Say, mister," one of them demanded breathlessly of the clerk, "is there a feller named Jarvis Hope a-staying here?"

"There he is, over by the door," said the clerk.

"That's my name, son," said the officer. "What do you want of me?"

"I reckon this letter's fer you ,then," and the boy displayed the note from Cleo.

"It's from Cleo!" he exclaimed, turning to Hook, who was peering eagerly over his shoulder. "Thank God, she's alive! That hell-hound Morton has her a prisoner up in the mountains. In a cabin on a ledge, she says."

"Do you think you could show me the place where you saw her," Hope asked the boy.

"Sure. I been fishin' there a lot of times."

"Come along, then," cried Hope, and, followed by Hook, he fairly dragged the boy into his motor car. Throwing in his clutch, he jammed his foot on the accelerator and the car leaped forward toward the mountains.

So excited were Hope and Hook at the prospect of finding Cleo that neither of them noticed that another car was following them, nor, when the roughness of the country compelled them to leave their machine and proceed on foot, did they notice that the two men in the other car did likewise.

For two hours the boy led them along the winding course of the river until at last they reached the gloomy defile, with its perpendicular walls of rock, known as Dead Man's gulch.

"There's where I seen the lady—up there," said the boy, pointing to where, far above them, the sheer face of the cliff cut the sky.

"Come on, Hook," called Hope. "There must be a trail to the top somewhere if we can only find it." His clothes torn by thorns, his face and hands scratched and bleeding, the young officer pressed doggedly upward, splashing across mountain torrents, forcing his way through almost impenetrable walls of underbrush, scrambling over bowlders, leaping crevasses, skirting the edges of dizzy chasms, but working steadily upward, ever upward. At last, streaming with perspiration and staggering from exhaustion, he reached the mesa where Morton had landed in the aeroplane. A fewscore yards away he could see, above a line of bushes, a weather-beaten cabin, and, standing in the doorway—God be thanked!—was Cleo. They saw each other at almost the same instant. Running to the brink of the chasm which separated them, Hope tried to call across to her, but the distance was too great; she could not catch his words. But he saw her pointing to the cable. Hurrying to the end of it, he glanced about for the basket, but it was not to be seen. Rendered reckless by his love for Cleo, and taking no thought as to how he was to get back, he grasped with both hands the pulley-hook from which had hung the basket and swung himself off into space. He was half way across the appalling abyss when Cleo, who had been watching him in terrified fascination, uttered a piercing shriek of horror. Small wonder that she shrieked. She had seen a man emerge suddenly from the bushes which lined the opposite cliff—a man whose evil face she recognized. It was Mahlin! Frozen with horror, she saw him run toward the end of the cable from which Hope was dangling. She saw him swing an ax high above his head; she saw it whistle through the air and bite deep into the rusted cable; she saw the strands of wire part, one by one; she saw her lover's face turn pallid—and then she fainted.

"THE POWER OF THE PRESS" EDDYTORIUL

Tother day we met Ame Hillyer on the st one of our most respeckted cittizens & also our well knowd attorney, leggal lite, J. of the P. notary publick et cetery & Ame said it must be a turrible fine calling to be the edditor & prop of the flourishing noosepaper like the Bingville Boogle and be able to exert the power of the press as he might say & mold and sway publick opinyun and so forth too numerous to mentchion.

This cashual conversashion with Ame give us a idee for a subjeck for a eddytoriul "The Power of the Press" for this ishue so here goes.

As edditor & prop of the Bugle we can take our edditorial pen in one hand and place our other eddytoriul hand over our heart and truthfully say that we aint found the "Power of the Press" to be exactly all that its cracked up to be.

Its all right to talk about molding & swaying publick opinyun in Bingville but we have notised a good menny times to our regret & humiliashion that when we furnish in this collum free advice & eddytoriul opinyuns our subscribers reads same with great gusto—& then goes and does as they blamed please! At far as "The Power of the Press" in conneckshion with the Bugle is concerned there is times when we feel almost powerless.

If there was as much power in the press as is generally supposed there is then when we threaten and bulldoze and bullyrag deadbeat subscribers who are back on their subscripshions ennywheres from $10 to $15. you would nacherly think they would come humbly on their hands and knees to this offis and settle up wouldnt you? Well do they come humbly on their hands and knees? Gorrammit, no! At a matter of fackt they dont come a tall! On the corntrary instid of coming to us like men (or wimmen as the case may be) and paying us what they owe us, they git mad and stop their papers and run us down to other subscribers and vow theyll nevver pay us a ct. as long as they live. Thats how much power of the press there is in the Bingville Bugle.

When folk pats us on the back and tells us how big & important & powerful we be and how we can mold publick opinyun like as if publick opinyun was made outen mud it makes us nauseated & sick to our stummick. What we need in our present financhial embaresment is is less compliments & more cash.

The only "Power of the Press" we know ennythink about is the elbow grease it takes to print the Bugle every wk on our rusty old broke down Warshington hand press.

Hoke Pizend

Hoke Peters is perfeckly misable these days. For quite a spell back Hoke's blood has been outen order so a few days ago he went out into the woods to dig some roots & yarbs with which to make some tea out of whitch he intended to take a swaller or two after each meal for a tonick as you might say.

Well Hoke he grubd around in the woods and found the root & yarbs he desired to make the concockshion from but the follering day afterward poor Hoke begin to break out all over with a irritashion of the skin and persooms that while he was diggin roots he got pizend by pizen ivy.

Hoke says he's kep so bizzy scratchin hisself whitch only makes it worse that he cant skeercely git time to do his chores and farm work and that he is 10 times worse off now being pizend than he was when merely his blood was outen order being as then it was one thing whereas now it's both. Hoke has the sympathy of the entire commoonitty in his afflickshion.

Si Past Through

Silas Osgood, the well known horse swapper of Hardscrabble druv thru Bingville tother day jest about as fast as the horse could go. We dont know what Si's hurry was but we persoom he was scairt to stop for fear some of our cittizens would indooce him to swap horses agin.

Last time Si was in Bingville he swapped horses with Deacon Butterworth and the Deacon skun Si like everything. Then the time before that when Si was in town Enos McCracken got the best of him in a hoss dicker. We calkilate after two sitch experiences that Si considers that when he has occashion to pass thru our midst the safest plan is for him to do so as fast as his ole bay mare can run.

Lafe Peters says he met Si after he had past thru about a mile out of town and that he was walkin his horse whitch was all outen breth and in a lather.

Reckt the Clock

In the hall of Deacon Snodgrasses residence stands a old fashioned clock wunch belongd to the Deacon's father before him and his father's father before him.

Every night the last thing afore the Deacon starts upstairs to bed he allus winds the clock and night before last was no excepshion to the rule. The Deacon and his wife Melissy had been reading in the setting room until the late hour of 9 p. m. It was quite a warmish evg. and the Deacon to be more comfortabler had took off his shoes and stockings and was in his bare feet.

Well Melissy had went on upstairs and whilst the Deacon was standin in the hall windin the clock yawnin his head off and haff asleep blamed if the cord on one of the clock weights weighing about 11 lbs. diddent break and the weight fell on one of the Deacon's bare feet smashing two toes.

The Deacon was wide awake in a instant. With a shreek of pain that could be heerd by all the nabers he grabd the injured foot in both hands and hopd around on tother foot moaning and groaning like everythink. When the Deacon realized that it was the clock whitch had crippeld him he lost his temper and before he thort what he was a doing he give the clock a vichious push and it fell smashing all to splinters & busting its inside works beyond huming recognishion as we might say.

Several of the nabers rusht over to the Deacon's to see if the house was on fire and they said that from the langwidge whitch the Deacon used you wouldn't nevver suspeckt him of being one of the stanchest pillers of the Bingville church, far from it.

Personal & Lokals Mixt

Nice wether as we write this. However there's no telling what kind of wether it will be when you read this. You never can tell what several days will bring forth.

Amos Hillyer our brillyunt loryer says he expecks to conduck a lawsuit next wk. if he has good luck betwixt Eb Winters and Enos Mills who lives nabers to each other. Ame has been trying to indooce em to go to law aginst each other about a line fence.

Cy Hoskins has been talking lately about painting his buggy and has went so far as to inquire of Hen Weathersby what the paint would cost. It wouldent be a bad idee for Cy to paint his buggy being as it aint been painted for 11 yrs. to our nolledge.

A stranger whose name we did not lern past thru our midst last wk. This is several times this humiliating thing has happend to us lately. If strangers passing thru our midst would kindly stop and leave their names and state their business at our office they would confer a great favor.

Mrs. Lem Brown says her hens aint laying quite as prolifick as they was a spell ago. Well, Mrs. Lem you can't expeckt your hens to lay at top speed all the time. Sometimes we think folks expects too much from their hens.

Jaspar Hawkins brung five doz. fresh eggs to Hen Weathersby's store last wk. and traded em out in groceries & other necessities of life. Jasps's hens seems to be doing well by him.

Bill Hepburn our artistick blacksmith made his ushual trip to the co. seat last Satterday and of course everybuddy expeckted him to come home under the weather as ushual. It was therefor a awful surprise & amazement when Bill arrove back in Bingville early in the afternoon sober as a judge and cross as a bear. It seems that Bill left his wallet in his other pants pocket when he shifted before leaving for the co. seat and diddent have a ct. to spend in liquor refreshment. Bill says he'll make up for it next Satterday or know the reason why.

Harve Hines our barber & tonsorial artist tells us that work in his line has begin to slack up being as them as had their hair cut when the wether 1st begin to warm up aint been back sinst and may not return until next spring. As for shaves Harve says its simply disgustin how men in Bingville shaves theirselfs.

Rev. Moore our beloved paster of the Bingville church will preach next Sabbath morning from the follering text: "It is More Blessed to Give Than to Receive." We persoom this is a mild hint to the congregashion who are back moren $200 on the paster's back salery.

Seth Dewberry our lion hearted town constubble is wearing a new badge whitch Bill Hepburn our artistick blacksmith made for him out of galvanized iron. It is a bout six inches acrost and is shaped like a star. Seth says his old badge wassent big enuff, but when his new one is shined up bright it can be saw on him nearly haff a mile away.

Wes Woodruff our expert hunter & trapper went fishing over to Gootchic Pond last Sunday and brung home a eel about five ft. long whitch he ketched on a hook & line by axident. Wesses wife cookd the eel and Wes et it. He says it tasted jest like fish. Personally we would jest as leef eat a snake as a eel & would haft to be turrible hungry to ete either one.

These is about all the "Personals & Lokals Mixt" whitch we can think of at this writing. Others may ockur to us later and if they are of suffishent importance we will publish them elsewhere in the Bugle. Look out for em!

Sally Stung

Last Sunday Miss Sally Hoskins our famous Bingville poet writer whose pomes apear from time to time in the Bugle & even in the co. seat papers took a walk into the woods back of Bingville last Sunday where she could indulge in beautiful thorts and commune with Nachure.

Miss Sally set down under a oak tree in a mossy dell and whilst she was engaged in communing she suddently discuvverd that she had inadvertently set down on a ground yallerjacket's nest! Sally run all the way home whitch is nearly a mile as fast as she could and arrived all outen breth but in spite of the good time she made she thinks she was stung praps six or eight times en route. Sally left her bonnet at the scene of the disaster and aint been back for it yet.

Sossiety News

Sossiety news are very skeerce in our midst this wk. and as a result we have nothink espeshial to make mentchion of. We are now jest betwixt hay and grass as you might say as far as Bingville sossiety is concernd—the gayeties of the winter soshial whirl is over and the summer picknicks aint begind yet in ernest but will soon. When they do look out for a large amount of sossiety news.

A Failure

Miss Amelia Tucker our raining sossiety queen had a pale pink dress that Miss Tabitha Underwood our fashionable dressmaker said she could dye beautiful blue for Amelia if she so desired.

Amelia asked Tabitha as a favor to say nothing about dying the pink dress blue and then folks would think she had purchased a new dress and what the publick diddent know wouldnt hurt em so Tabitha promist.

Well to make a long story short Tabitha tride to dye the dress but the dyes diddent work right or somethink and as a result the dress is several different colors and looks ridicklus in the extream. Amelia got awful mad at Tabitha for spiling her dress whitch she says she wouldnt be saw even on a dark night in. Then Tabitha got mad and up and told the whole thing and now the cat is outen the bag. The wimmen folks of Bingville says they are surprised to learn that Amelia Tucker would wear a dyed dress and try to pass it off as a new one.

Widow Skinner Huckstering

The Widow Skinner has went into the garden marketing bizness. The Widow has a fine garden this yr. and is raising more truck than she can use. So a wk. ago Satterday she driv to the co. seat in her buckboard with quite a mess of garden sass sitch as unions, lettuce, reddishes et cetery and peddled it out from house to house at a considerable profit.

The Widow says she is going to make two trips a wk. with garden truck hereafter as long as her garden lasts. Mrs. Skinner is quite a bizness woman in spite of her sex.

Hank Indisposed

Hank Dewberry who was to of went to work last wk. for Cy Hoskins doing some work on Cy's lower farm did not do so.

While shutting his jackknife after cutting off a chew of tobacco from his plug down to Hen Weathersby's store tother evg. Hank axidentally cut a gash in his thum. Hank says soon as this wound starts to heel he has to go and knock it agin some fool thing or other and busts it open agin and he calkilates unless he goes to bed it wont be able to do a lick of work all summer. Besides Hank says he's a leetle mite scairt to work in sitch awful hot wether being as he's afeard of sunstroke with whitch he has been threatened several times in the past.

I Teem & Hawl

For several yrs I have only had 1 horse, but last wk I purchased one more addishional horse whitch makes two. Now with two horses on my hands I am in a posishion to do teeming & hawling.

How are you off for teeming & hawling? If you have enny work in this line I am the party for you. It aint everybuddy who happens to own two horses and a big road wagon like I do, and yet now and then they desire to have somethink teemed or hawled. Righ there's where I come in handy.

I don't care a tarnashion what I teem or hawl so long as I get a reasonable price per load for the same. It's all the same to me whether it's stone, or lumber, merchandise or household goods, bricks or hay. Of course I could hawl a bigger load of hay than I could of bricks, but the price would be the same.

Hen Weathersby has engaged me to teem & hawl all his goods from the co. seat to his store. I teemd & hawled my 1st load for Hen last wk and cheerfully refer you to him. All I lost offen the waggin was a box of prunes.

If you aint got no teem of your own give me a chanst to do your teeming & hawling and thus make a honest living for myself & my fambily.

Made an Address.

In an address at Indianapolis Friday Mr. Lathrope placed before the Chamber of Commerce the advantages of city planning and the purposes of the proposed display. The matter of bringing the exhibit to Indianapolis will probably be taken up by the executive committee of the Indianapolis commerce chamber.

Great Interest Shown.

"In cities where Mr. Lathrope has taken the exhibit great interest has been manifested, he explained, and much progress has been made in the coordination of the best municipal forces for the common good.

"Mr. Lathrope said city planning embraces a large scope of the activities of a city, such as the transportation interests, the mercantile, manufacturing and industrial enterprises generally, real estate, social service movements, housing, the juvenile court, commercial organizations, and many other movements. It is his plan, he said, to bring these forces together in cities where he starts his campaign.

Advantages of Planning.

"The exhibit consists of photographs, drawings, maps, descriptions of plans and many other things which give those interested a comprehensive understanding of the advantages of city planning as a science which benefits the people financially and every other way.

"At the chamber Thursday, Mr. Lathrope addressed a group of business men from the chamber, the board of trade, the Indianapolis real estate board and the park board."

NAVAL BUILDING PLAN FIGHT ON IN SENATE

Washington, D. C., July 15.—Fight over the building program of the naval bill began in the senate today. This section provides for eight capital ships in 1917 instead of the house's five, and contemplates completion of the navy general board's five-year building program within three years. Debate was expected to last several days.

Senator Norris was on his feet late yesterday to open an attack on the building plan, but leaders agreed to postpone discussion until today because of the small number of senators present.

Senate democrats will caucus tonight to decide whether the legislative program drawn up recently shall be extended at the cost of lengthening the present session of congress beyond September. Many democrats are insistent that special measures be added to the program agreed on but leaders realize this means a session lasting into the fall.

Democrats and republicans still are apart on what measures are to be disposed of. Earlier in the week at a joint conference republicans consented to consideration of appropriation, revenue, shipping and corrupt practice measures, but democratic champions of many measures are demanding now that this program be enlarged.

PASSENGERS CLIMB THROUGH CAR ROOF

Michigan City, Ind., July 15.—About fifty passengers on the Wolverine flyer westbound on the Michigan Central, had narrow escapes yesterday afternoon when the last two coaches of the train, both sleeping cars, jumped the track in the yards here. One of the cars turned over. Its steel construction probably saving many lives.

The front trucks of the last coach split a switch and ran upon a siding, dragging the forward car across the main track. After the coupling broke the rear car ran along the ties of the siding for 200 feet until it buried its trucks in the ground and stopped in an upright position.

Roof of Car Crushed.

The forward coach tore up the main track for about 300 feet more and turned over, crushing part of its roof against a box car. The crash with the box car resulted in a rent in the roof of the coach, which permitted the imprisoned passengers to walk out.

All the passengers were removed to the forward coaches of the train and continued on their journey a few minutes later. Several had slight cuts from broken glass. The most severe injury was received by Mrs. W. I. Lamb, of Gibson City, Ill. She had a severe gash in an arm, but refused to go to a hospital. She received surgical attention on the train. The clothing of F. F. Duval, of Memphis, Tenn., was ripped to tatters, but his injuries were minor scratches and bruised. Lives were saved probably because the coach was of steel.

GEN. LAWTON'S SON WOULD REJOIN ARMY

Marshall and Taggart Aid Effort to Lift Statutory Limitation.

Washington, July 15.—An unusual situation has been created in army circles over the effort to get back in the service Manley Lawton, the son of the famous General Lawton, of Fort Wayne, who died when leading his troops in the Philippines.

Manley Lawton, who served through much of the Philippine campaign with his father as a member of the Philippine scouts, retired from the army because of poor health about three years ago. He since has regained his health and desires to get back in the service.

Vice President Marshall and Senator Taggart have become interested in the case, and, in trying to get Lawton back in the service, have run up against a statutory limitation which would keep Lawton out. He is twenty-nine years old, while the law does not permit any one to enter the army as a second lieutenant who is above the age of twenty-seven.

Army officers and officials of the war department are anxious to do everything they can for Lawton, but it seems as if they will have to get a special act of the congress to enable him to be taken back into the service. In case all other expedients fail, Senator Taggart is prepared to introduce a bill to this effect.

FOR IMPROVED HIGHWAYS.

Many counties in this section of the state are building many miles of improved roads, according to J. Herman Bueter, manager of the bond department of the German-American National bank. At Portland the treasurer of Jay county will on July 25 sell an issue of $19,000 worth of bonds. Other counties report the following: Columbia City, Whitley county, $3,018 worth of stone road bonds, 4½ per cent; Plymouth Marshall county, $15,700, $12,000 and $6,200, 4½ per cent, ten years; Warsaw, Kosciusko county, $16,980, 4½ per cent, ten years; Angola, Steuben county, $9,840, 4½ per cent, fifteen years.

WARNING TO HOTELS AND BOARDING HOUSES

Must Help in Combating Spread of Infantile Paralysis.

New York, July 15.—Hotel and boardinghouse keepers all over the state were notified today by local health officers that they would be expected to do their part in preventing the spread of infantile paralysis. The local health authorities acted under instructions from Dr. Hermann M. Biggs, state commissioner of health who was led to send out a new circular of information owing to the fact that thousands of families have left New York for the rural districts to safeguard the health of their children.

Proprietors of hotels and boarding houses will be required to notify health officers of the arrival of any children from infected districts. Those who fail to do so, Dr. Biggs said, would be held responsible for any unfavorable developments. The state health department also urged local health officers to see that glasses, dishes, spoons, and other utensils used in eating and drinking in public places are thoroughly scalded or otherwise disinfected after use. This rule has been enforced already in New York city. The instructions apply particularly to soda fountains.

Physicians fighting the plague here were encouraged today by cooler weather, also by the fact that there has been a slight decrease in the number of offenders arrested for violating the sanitary ordinances. The police report that janitors and caretakers are co-operating with them to enforce the law.

TRACK RAISING WORK MAY START IN FALL

It is possible that work on raising 3,100 feet of track of the Fort Wayne and Northwestern Traction company through the town of Huntertown will be started this fall, according to announcement made by William C. Schwier, county commissioner. When work starts will depend to some extent on the available labor.

The county commissioners conferred with Philip A. Holman, engineer for the traction company, Friday afternoon at Huntertown, and approved measurements for the raising of the tracks of the company from 2 to 6 1-3 inches. By raising the tracks to that level they will conform to a grade of the stone road which the county commissioners will build in two years, Mr. Schwier said. The tracks of the traction company have been down since 1905 and recent rains have made work of highway superintendents in Huntertown on the road over which the tracks pass difficult.

The traction company's engineer will now prepare a profile of the work to be done, which will come up for the approval of the county commissioners.

ONE REGIMENT WILL DISBAND

Second West Virginia to Recruit Up to Full War Strength.

Charleston, W. Va., July 15.—Orders have been received to recruit the second West Virginia infantry to full war strength. The regiment now has 892 men mustered into federal service and 1,042 more are needed. The first infantry will disband. Two-thirds of its 800 men will be transferred to the Second regiment and the balance will form the skeletons of new artillery and cavalry units of which the state now has none. Many families of men in the second infantry now in camp are in destitute circumstances. Aid has been promised but has failed to materialize. Col. Morrison announces that unless dependents are promptly provided for he will approve the discharge of all married men. There are 4 letter men.

PONIES ARE OFF AT CHICAGO ONCE MORE

Chicago, July 15.—Horse racing was revived in Chicago today after an interim of twelve years. At Hawthorne track a ten-day meeting was opened, the feature event today being the derby, worth $10,000. The last race meeting held here was in 1901, when High Ball won the American derby at Washington park. According to officials of the Illinois Jockey club, under whose management the meeting is held, the advance sale shows that a big crowd will be at the course when the first race is called at 2:30 this afternoon.

Four three-year-olds are entered for the derby, the John Sanford entry, George Smith, winner of the Kentucky derby, having been withdrawn on telegraphic orders, from the owner, because of soreness developed in a recent workout. Dick Williams, the Schorr entry, did not arrive. The entries in the derby, one and a quarter miles, for which there is a purse of $10,000, $7,000 to first, $1,750 to second, $750 to third, and $500 to fourth, are as follows:

Churchill, 119, F. Keogh; F. P. Keene.

HARRISON HILL REACHED QUICKLY FROM DOWNTOWN

Because of the fact that the distance from the court house to Harrison Hill, the new addition located in the angle formed by Calhoun street and Rudisill boulevard, can be covered in one straight line of travel as a bird flies, this tract can be reached much more quickly than many other residential sections which may be somewhat nearer the business district if the distance were measured in a straight line. Upon realizing the truth of this fact many people wonder why Harrison Hill was not platted years ago, and it does seem remarkable that real estate men have overlooked this feature which is helping to contribute to the number of purchasers of lots in this addition. Full details regarding Harrison Hill may be secured from Hilgemann and Schaaf, North American building.

IT WILL RANK AMONG BIG TENNIS BATTLES

Meeting of Jap Expert and Griffit hat Utica Will Be Notable.

Utica, N. Y., July 15.—The meeting of Ichiya Kumage, the Oriental champion, and Clarence J. Griffin, of San Francisco in the final round of the New York state lawn tennis championship today takes a front rank among the great tennis battles of the season. The Japanese player, on account of his steady improvement since coming to the United States, and his splendid showing in the present tournament is now regarded as one of the most dangerous opponents in the country. If he wins the championship here no one is willing to predict where his career will end. Kumage and Griffin met last winter in Manila for the championship of the Orient and the Japanese took the title after five hard sets. He also defeated Griffin in an exhibition match at Tokio.

Griffin reached the finals yesterday by defeating Harold Vandyke Johns and Harold Throckmorton. Kumage yesterday beat the New York state holder, Wm. S. McElroy, in two straight sets and in the semi-finals defeated Theodore Whitney of New York, with his partner, Mikimi, he will play today in the semi-final round of the doubles tournament.

THE DAY ON WALL STREET.

New York, July 15.—Additional liquidation of specialties accounted for the uncertain condition of today's narrow and professional market after an initial period of strength. Tennessee Copper was the weak feature, falling three points to its lowest prices in two years and causing reactions of a point or thereabouts in other speculative issues. These losses were largely retrieved later. U. S. Steel was firm, Bethlehem lost almost ten points and rails were firm, when not making actual gains. Shipping shares and Motions were passive, and Sears Roebuck featured the specialties of its class with a gain of five points. The closing was irregular. Bonds were steady.

Gains were far outnumbered by declines at the opening of today's moderate operations, specialties, particularly motors equipments and shipping shares, evincing a tendency to make further recoveries. United Fruit scored the most substantial advance, rising over two points, with a point or more for Maxwell's, Studebaker, American Locomotive, Tennessee Copper, United States Rubber and Butte-Superior. Rails, Pennsylvania excepted, were fractionally higher, with U. S. Steel, Westinghouse and Pittsburg Coal. Dealings indicated the usual active demand.

POLK MAKES U. S. RULING

Washington, July 15—The state department formally ruled today that the German submarine Deutschland is a merchant vessel and entitled to treatment as such.

In announcing the ruling, Acting Secretary Polk said it was not to be taken as a precedent and that any similar cases arising in the future would be dealt with on their own merits.

"In view of the facts in this particular case," said Mr. Polk, "there is no reason why the Deutschland should be considered a war vessel."

Based Upon Reports.

The department's action was based upon reports of navy customs officers who examined the submarine at Baltimore and found that she was unarmed and incapable of bearing converted for war-like purposes without extensive structural changes. An advisory report from the neutrality board, to which the case was referred informally by Mr. Polk, held that the vessel should be accorded all the privileges of a peaceful commerce carrier.

JOHN J. BERNET SUCCEEDS CANNIFF

Cleveland, Ohio, July 15.—The Nickel Plate railroad was reorganized by its new owners, O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen, here today.

President W. H. Canniff resigned, and John J. Bernet, vice president of the New York Central, was elected to succeed him.

Mr. Bernet commenced work on the N. Y. C. lines in 1899 an dwas rapidly advanced, serving at different times as train dispatcher, trainmaster, superintendent, assistant general superintendent and assistant to the president, becoming vice president two years ago. He is forty-eight years old. W. H. Canniff, the retiring president, is sixty-eight years old and his railroad career dates from 1863, when he became a section hand and later a watchman on the Lake Shore road at Osseo, Mich. He came to the Nickel Plate as assistant general superintendent in 1889, was made general superintendent in 1892, general manager in 1896 and president in 1898.

Washington, July 15.—Details of the agreement on disputed points between house and senate in the postal bill which became available today show that the pneumatic tube contracts in large cities which the postoffice department wished to discontinue are to be extended to March 4, 1917, pending negotiations.

The long-standing row over payments to railroads for carrying mails and the manner of payment will be referred to the interstate commerce commission to determine whether the roads shall be paid on a space or weight basis and at what rate. Existing methods remain in effect meanwhile except on certain selected routes where the space system contended for by the railroads will be tested.

Publishers will have the right of appeal to federal courts from orders sending publications by freight, but the orders will remain in effect in the meantime. More than a million dollars disputed back pay is involved.

SHOWERS STIMULATE BACK YARD CULTURE

The rains during the past week were great for farmers. Both rural and city farmers. In the country the dashing showers and wind blew down the grain to some extent and injured the fruit trees, but they were considered as blessings after the parching draught. In the city, in the back yards of Fort Wayne, the hail punctured the yellow lettuce leaves and riddled the straggling stocks of yellow corn, but the rain brought back the flush of life to all the vegetables.

New interest is being taken in the back yard truck patches since the storms. Weeds are being pulled and the hoe is biting the earth again. Before the rains the white clay, which is prevalent in the rear lots of Fort Wayne, was like marble. Weeds broke off even with the ground instead of yielding to the sturdy pull. Vegetables and flowers began to look sickly.

Mrs. Josephine Nesbitt, head of the beautification department of the city, says she was surprised at the condition of gardens when she made a round over the city Friday and Saturday morning. City farmers have taken new hope and bumper crops are ahead. Above the vegetable life nods a wealth of flowers in most cases, Mrs. Nesbitt states.

Schagle fell when a board on the scaffold tipped with him. He was helping six other workmen who are remodeling the big house and building a garage. Schagle was working near the roof of the garage. He fell twelve feet and landed on his right side in the alley below. Workmen summoned the patrol. Schagle was removed to the Lutheran hospital where his injuries were cared for.

HAGEN WINS OPEN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Turning in a card of 74, he beat James M. Barnes, of the White Marsh Valley, Pa., Country club, with 75, and Charles H. Hoffner, of the Philmont Country club, Hutington Valley, Pa., with 77. The three today played off an extra round to decide tie scores at the end of yesterday's play.

Judge Saunderson was 76 years old and was born in this state where he spent almost his entire life. He served during the civil war and on his return took up the reading of law in Monticello. In 1902 he was a candidate on the democratic ticket for the appellate judgeship but was defeated. He served six years as judge of the Benton-Warren circuit.

Alexandria, Ind., July 15.—The champion ice cream eater hails from Alexandria as far as all available records of ice cream show. Lon Markie, a farmer who pitches hay as easily as the city chap shoots pool, walked into a drug store here and remarked that he believed it would be nothing unusual for him to eat ten dishes of ice cream. Then he sat down and ate thirty-four dishes of ice cream of the usual size.

St. Joseph, Mo., July 15.—Mrs. Oscar McDaniel, wife of the prosecuting attorney of Buchanan county, whose skull was crushed by an unidentified man at her home about midnight last night, died today without having regained consciousness.

Five shots were fired at her husband, who engaged in a revolver duel with the man, who escaped.

McDaniel recently has received letters threatening his life. The attack was carefully planned and the police connect it with an anonymous letter received by McDaniel about a week ago.

McDaniel was called down town by a telephone message about 11:30 p. m. The voice at the telephone said his brother was ill and he had taken him home. McDaniel drove in his car to the place designated but did not find his brother. He hurried home and as he stopped his car in front of the house a man opened fire on him from behind a tree. After his assailant fled the prosecutor went to his wife's room where he found her unconscious on the floor, her head badly crushed. Bloodhounds are being used in an effort to track the assailant.

NEW YORK EPIDEMIC SHOWS NO ABATEMENT

New York, July 15.—A marked drop in temperature failed today materially to reduce the fatalities or development of the epidemic of infantile paralysis. During the twenty-four hours ending at 10 o'clock this morning there were 27 deaths and 144 new cases of the disease reported in the five boroughs of New York city.

To control the epidemic, which has been felt in all parts of the country, the Rockefeller foundation today donated the sum of $50,000 to those in charge of the fight against the disease. Mayor Mitchell has been named a member of the committee through which the fund will be disbursed.

Since the epidemic started on June 26, nineteen days ago, 1,853 cases have been reported and there have been 369 deaths.

NAVAL MILITIA ON PRACTICE CRUISE

Washington, July 15.—Naval militia of the United States started today on the annual two weeks' practice cruise, using nine reserve battleships on the Atlantic coast and a battleship and two cruisers on the Pacific. About 270 officers and 4,200 militiamen were engaged, in addition to a somewhat smaller number of regular naval officers and enlisted men.

Rear Admiral Helm commands the vessels for the eastern organization, which leaves Boston, Philadelphia, New York and Norfolk for Block Sound, R. I., for maneuvers. On the west coast the ships will go to Sitka, Alaska.

Ship Has Broken in Two and Will Undoubtedly Be Total Loss.

Charleston, S. C., July 15.—All the 142 men who abandoned the large naval collier, Hector, when she grounded last night, are safe, Captain Bryan, of the Charleston naval yard, announced early today.

One hundred and two marines and sailors from the Hector were landed here this morning. Capt. Newell and 16 men remain aboard the Hector, which is lying aground off Charleston light ship broken in two. Four injured marines were sent to a local hospital.

The Hector, commanded by Captain Joseph Newell, had sailed from Port Royal, S. C., naval training station, carrying sixty marines to Santo Domingo, when she was partially disabled in Friday's hurricane. She grounded while trying to make Charleston harbor, convoyed by the steamer Alamo. High seas had prevented the attempt of getting close enough to take off the men, who took to their small boats. In addition to her commander and the marines, the Hector, which displaced 11,200 tons, carried eleven officers and a crew of seventy men.

"If it is a fact that the fish killed in the St. Mary's river Friday, died because the water was poisoned by sewage, the river water must be in bad condition," Dr. Gilpin, secretary o fthe health board, said Saturday.

"If the water is poisoned enough to kill even carp, it is hardly fit to wind near Fort Wayne homes. It brings up the question of allowing everything to be dumped into the river, which flows through the city.

"Every year the health board mentions in it sannual report the poor sewage system of the city. Sewers of all kinds pour their filth into the river. It is always worse in summer. There may be little danger from plague but it might cause disease for children, who make much use of the cooling stream.

"A sewage farm might not be considered as practical now, but if the city continues to grow and the sewage increases in abundance, a plan to keep waste from the river must follow. To place the sewage system of Fort Wayne on an absolutely sanitary basis would cost a milion dollars."

DEAD FLIES NOW DOWN TO TEN CENTS PINT AT PERU.

Peru, Ind., July 15.—The Anti-Tuberculosis society here started a fly swatting campaign yesterday by offering 20 cents a hundred for dead flies—and the society nearly was bankrupt at the end of the day. All the children in town, it seemed, reported with dead flies and before evening it was announced that the price had been reduced to ten cents a pint. One little girl brought in 1,600 dead flies and received $2 for a half day's work.

STORM DOES MUCH DAMAGE

Damage done in Fort Wayne by the storm Friday afternoon will run into the thousands of dollars. There can be no accurate estimate, although $75,000 is believed to be conservative. Thousands of dollars worth of goods stored in downtown basements that were flooded were either ruined or badly damaged.

The storm did the most serious damage at the garage of A. J. Rose and company on the northeast corner of Superior and Calhoun, in the building formerly occupied by the Boss Manufacturing company. The structure was unable to withstand the fury of the gale, causing it to collapse. Contrary to first impression, the building was not struck by lightning, but it is now believed that the weight of the water, which could not be carried off, caused the roof to give way, crashing through to the first floor.

Washington, D. C., July 15.—Solution of difficulties between the United States and Mexico appeared today to trend more and more towards settlement through an international joint commission. Informal conferences between Acting Secretary of State Polk and Eliseo Arredondo, Mexican ambassador, it was indicated, were developing questions for probable submission to such a body.

General Carranza is said to approve the commission plan of settling differences as provided in the treaty of 1848 and state department officials are believed to be willing to let negotiations take this course, though preferring that adjustment be made through the present conference. President Wilson it is understood, is not dissatisfied with the direction negotiations are taking.

London, July 15—(12:15 p. m.)—Major R. M. Dutton, United States marine, retired, who is attached to the American Commission for the Relief of Belgium, was fined 500 marks recently by a German military tribunal in Brussels.

A press despatch received here says the nature of Major Dutton's offense is not known, but that the fine was imposed for "disrespectful conduct" toward a German officer. At the office of the Belgian commission here, it was stated Major Dutton was fined after his automobile had frightened a German officer's horse. No importance was attached to the incident by representatives of the commission.

Muncie, Ind., July 15.—Miss Harriet Williams, stenographer for Gene Williams, formerly deputy prosecuting attorney, who recently was convicted here and sentenced to prison for bribery, is expected to testify for the defense in the trial of Mayor Rollin H. Bunch, charged with soliciting and accepting bribes.

It was learned today that Miss Williams, who is in Dayton, where she went before the Williams trial began, has been served with a subpoena and has consented to return and testify. Attorneys for the state said they would be content with cross examining her and would not use her as a state's witness.

Mrs. Viola Gossett, who runs a rooming house here, was the first witness at today's session. She testified that in July, 1914, she was called to the office of Williams, and she quoted him as having said: "We have too many rooming houses in Muncie, and we are going to assess them $5 to $25 a week. We are going to assess you $5 a week. Now you understand that neither Roll (the mayor) Frank Mann (prosecutor) nor I get any of this—it's for campaign purposes."

She said she could not pay the alleged assessment.

She denied selling beer at her home, but said she had served it to Williams and Lloyd Tont several times when they called. She denied ever having paid them graft money. Her residence was raided twice by the police and once she was accused of contributing to the delinquency of a girl. She said she never met the mayor.

Waukegan, Ill., July 15.—The case of Will H. Orpet, University of Wisconsin student, charged with the murder of Marion Lambert, was given to the jury this afternoon.

Counsel for the defeendant said that Judge Donnelly's instructions to the jury were tantamount to a command to the jury to acquit.

There is believed to be a possibility that Orpet may knew his fate by nightfall. David R. Josiyn, special prosecutor, completed his final argument in the case shortly before Judge Donnelly began to give his instructions.

Bridgehampton, N. Y., July 15.—Charles E. Hughes announced today that Mrs. Hughes would accompany him on his campaign trip to the Pacific coast next month. Mrs. Hughes will also join her husband in his fortnight of outdoor life and mountain climbing, having accompanied her husband frequently in Switzerland and climbed with him to the summit of the Alpine peaks.

The nominee expects to make the political part of his trip a purely business affair and to that end has decided to decline all social invitations on the trip. He will travel probably in a private car which will be attached to regular trains and at the chief cities where he will speak and stop over night at hotels. Miss Frances Keller, chairman of the woman's national committee of the Hughes alliance, was a luncheon guest today at the nominee's summer home.

BERLIN ADMITS SOME REVERSES

This marks a British advance of four miles from the original German lines as they existed at the beginning of the offensive on July 1, in the Mametz sector. The force of the renewed British drive is shown not only in the ground gained but in the number of prisoners captured. London reports the taking of more than 2,000 Germans within the past twenty-four hours, the total since the start of the offensive now being in excess of 10,000.

While the British are thus pushing back the Teutonic lines, the French on their right flank are remaining comparatively inactive, having already achieved a similar object. They are busy at Verdun, however, where they have repulsed an attack near the Avocourt redoubt, on the extreme left of the Verdun front, while their artillery is actively replying to bombardments by the crown prince's guns on the east bank of the Meuse.

At Apremont attempted German attacks were broken up by the French fire. Hard fighting continues between Russians and Turks in Turkish Armenia where the Russians are pushing westward from Mamakahatun. The result of the battle so far is indecisive, Constantinople reports.

London, July 15.—(2:58 p. m.)—The British offensive was resumed today. The war office announced that at one point the Germans were forced back to their third line positions. More than 2,000 prisoners were taken.

VIOLENT ARTILLERY DUEL.

Paris, July 15.—A violent artillery duel continues in the Flurey sector, the war office announced today. A German attack on a trench northeast of the Avocourt redoubt was repulsed, the official statement asserts, and German attempts to undertake attacks in the Apremont forest were checked by a curtain of fire.

TENSION GROWS GREATER.

Rome, July 15.—(Via Paris, 1:45 p. m.)—A strong demand has arisen in the press and among the public for cancellation of the agreement between Italy and Germany, whereby the rights of citizens of each country within the others domain to be respected, violation of the agreement by Germany be-

Fort Wayne Banks Stand Tenth in the Clearings

Bank clearings for the week ending July 13, as reported to Bradstreet's Journal, New York city, shows that in eighteen cities of less than 125,000 population, Fort Wayne banks stood tenth in the record for bank clearings, with a total of $1,667,000.

Total bank clearings for the week ending Saturday, amount to $1,670,219.12, as compared with $1,252,212.50 the same week last year, and $1,511,145.77 last week. The balances are $229,517.74.

The clearings for each day of the week were as follows: Monday, $303,863.90; Tuesday, $270,796.16; Wednesday, $252,565.35; Thursday, $285,016.89; Friday, $268,886.67; Saturday, $289,90.15.

The total of bank clearings in the United States for the week was $4,902,140,000 against $4,509,438,000 the previous week, and $3,336,457,000 for the week ending July 12 in 1915. Bank clearings at Indianapolis for the week were $11,663,000.

Said He Was Drunk and Believed He Was Getting Into Own Room.

William Shiedler, 18, whose parents live in Mishawaka, was bound over to the circuit court under $1,000 bond from municipal court Saturday morning after he had admitted entering the home of John Woich, 2011 John street, Thursday night.

Shiedler said he was intoxicated and thought he was climbing through the back window of his rooming house and into his room. He was afraid to go home drunk, he said, and arouse the landlady. He admitted having been arrested on a similar charge in Lagrange, some time ago. He served one week in jail for the offense, he said.

Mrs. Woich told that she was awakened when Shiedler held a lighted match near her face, when she was sleeping in the rear room. She screamed for help. Her husband and son ran into the room and caught hold of Shiedler. The youth begged to be allowed to go, she told. She called the police while the men held Shiedler.

William Klomp, real estate dealer, acted as interpreter for Mrs. Woich and her daughter, who are Polish. Officer Young said that Shiedler told him he was investigating at the house and was doing special police duty. Judge Kerr will have Shiedler examined by a physician while in the county jail as the judge thinks he may be mentally deranged.

One Prisoner in Hospital.

Remi Menjoro, 35, could not be tried on a drunk charge Saturday morning because he is in the St. Joseph hospital suffering from a fractured skull. Menjoro was injured when he attempted to get up after falling from an express truck at the interurban station. He struck his head on a bolt when rising.

Patrolman Amos said he saw Menjoro roll from the truck and realizing that the man was intoxicated, started towards him. The Italian hurried to get up and hit his head. He was rendered groggy. Menjoro was removed to the hospital, where a slight fracture was discovered. His trial is set for July 22. He is held under $25 bond.

Jack Gehler, who gave his home as Huntington, and Al Sennido, who has been working near Decatur, companions of Menjoro, who were also lounging about the interurban station in a drunken condition, were fined $1 and costs each.

The case against Frank Fordham, machinist, 2213 Weisser Park avenue, was continued until July 31. Fordham had been in court some time ago on the same charge of child neglect. He told the court he had been doing better since that time and would try and provide for his family in the future.

George Ghent, farmer living eight miles north of the city and father of Mrs. Fordham, urged Judge Kerr to fine Fordham.

"It is no use," Ghent told Kerr. "We have tried him so many times. He will not be good."

Mrs. Fordham did not want her husband sent to jail. He is all right when sober, she claimed. The husband must pay his wife $8 a week from his wages or go to jail, Kerr ordered. The wife is to report to the court.

Other Police Court Cases.

Pat Boba, tramp printer, was fined $5 and costs after being convicted on a drunk charge. He had been arrested by Police Chief Lenz, who said he gave the man a chance to go home and go to bed but later found the fellow in a saloon.

"The chief of police or nobody else has a right to tell me when to go to bed," Boba argued to the court.

John Sullivan, 72 years old, who says he has been working as a gardener in Churubusco, was fined $1 and costs after being convicted on a drunk charge. He is gray and broken by the years and he wept when told that he must go to jail.

Richard McVey, of Auburn, was fined $5 and costs after pleading guilty to a charge of public intoxication. Case of Dan Driskell, charged with being drunk, was continued until Monday. Bruno Staseke, charged with loitering, will be tried Tuesday. He is held under $25 bond.

After Session of Court.

An after session of court was held to dispose of the case of Elmer Des Garden, Russian, charged with vagrancy. Des Garden had been arrested out on Wayne trace shortly after court adjourned.

The patrol had answered the call to Edsall avenue, where it was said a man was begging. The policemen met Des Garden on the way out. They stopped and talked with him. He told a story of being a laboring man. Police went on to Edsall avenue, where they were directed to return and arrest Des Garden. He pleaded not guilty to the vagrancy charge and will be tried Monday.

the men to leave. They were no sooner out of danger than the building collapsed. Three automobiles in the garage were badly damaged.

Lightning Plays Havoc.

The lightning played havoc and all sorts of pranks in every section of the city, the northern and eastern sections of the city, however, being hit the hardest. Many houses, barns and trees were struck. According to Weather Observer P. McDonough, there was a total of 2.28 inches of precipitation, which was the heaviest in years. A total of 2.26 inches fell between 2:22 p. m. and 3 p. m., and of this .85 of an inch fell from 2:40 p. m. to 2:45 p. m. The greatest 24-hour amount on record is 4.78 inches, August 26, 1899.

Water in Subways.

The catch basins and sewers being unable to carry off the water caused a miniature river under the viaducts at Calhoun, Fairfield and Broadway, blocking all street car traffic. About three feet of water was in the Calhoun street subway. As a matter of fact the water rushed down Calhoun street at a maddening pace, filling store rooms and basements for several blocks.

Fire Department Busy.

During the storm the fire department was kept on the jump, every piece of fire apparatus with the exception of No. 3 company, being kept busy answering calls in different sections of the city. An alarm came in about 2:15 o'clock when lightning struck the barn of E. Arter, along the St. Mary's river, between Pape avenue and Herman street. Mr. Arter, who is an excavating contractor, keeps twelve teams of horses and as many wagons in the barn, but fortunately they were all out Friday afternoon. The structure was almost totally destroyed. Mrs. E. Arter, 522 West Superior street, who owned the building, estimates the loss at $1,500, which, however, is covered by insurance.

Other alarms came from 506 Buchanan street, 1312 South Calhoun street and 2404 North Clinton street. A bad blaze was threatened at 1312 Calhoun street, when lightning followed a wire into the basement of the Blattner Furniture company's store, creating some pyrotechnics that for a time looked serious. At 2404 North Clinton street the residence of Harry Wenard was struck and caught fire, which, however, was extinguished before any great damage was done.

At the Crematory.

The terrific wind blew down the steel smoke stack on the municipal garbage plant on North Clinton street, demolishing it and causing damage estimated at $300. Part of the slate roof was also blown off. The board of works immediately ordered a new stack. The plant will not be shut down.

More than 1,200 telephones were put out of commission. Considerable damage was done at the federal building, where the pipes leading from the roof to the ground filled up, being unable to carry off the water, resulting in the flooding of the mailing room.

Harmar Stack Hit.

The large brick smoke stack on the new Harmar school was struck by lightning, tearing a hole into it several feet long. Bricks were hurled in every direction. Lightning also struck the high steeple on the Trinity English Lutheran church and a corner of the Hope hospital, doing slight damage. Chimneys were struck on the home of Henry Baade, on Broadway, and Levi A. Todd, 614 West Fourth street.

Big Barn Burns.

The large barn on the farm of Charles Hoffmayer, four and one-half miles northeast of the city, on the Leesburg road, was burned to the ground as result of being struck by lightning. Much newly made hay was damaged. The loss is estimated at $1,500.

Two trees standing in front of the residence of Manning Smith, 1015 East Wayne street, were struck by lightning. One of them was blown down, falling on Mr. Smith's house. Water filled the basements of the News, Journal-Gazette and Freie-Presse, damaging much white paper.

Farmer Knocked Down.

John Poor, a farmer residing just north of Etna Green, in Kosciusko county, was knocked down as he was leading a horse in the barnyard at his home. He was unconscious for some little time. The horse suffered the same experience.

Blackford County Boy Killed.

Jesse Needler, 9 years old, son of Mrs. Ada Needler, seven miles northwest of Hartford City, was struck and killed instantly by lightning Friday afternoon. A hole was burned through his body. The boy was in a field after cattle when he met his death.

Many Lights Out.

Many lights were out until a late hour Friday night in Fort Wayne, some sections of the city being in total darkness until after 10 o'clock. Railroad men say the storm was local. A roof was blown from the Central foundry, taking with it several wires of the Nickel Plate railroad, the only damage suffered by this road.

Streets Are Littered.

City Forester Getz was besieged by telephone calls asking him to see that limbs which had been blown from trees by the storm Friday be removed from sidewalks and streets. Police were also called several times and notified that trees had fallen across streets and in a few cases blocked traffic completely.

Forester Getz secured services of two wagons from the board of works and had the fallen limbs removed. Nearly every street in the city was partly filled with shattered limbs, he said. In some cases whole trees were down. Many trees in the city parks suffered. The great maple trees of the city suffered most, Getz believes.

A total of 1,903,250 tons of water fell during the storm, basing the estimate on the assumption that an equal amount of rain fell throughout the city's 11.5 square miles of area.

They Will Be Mustered in by Battery Captain Next Wednesday.

Twenty-three young men residing in and near Hoagland have joined Battery D, now being organized by Captain John C. Scheffer, and on next Wednesday evening they will be mustered in.

The information was brought to Captain Scheffer, Saturday, by John Lannert, formerly with the Twenty-fifth and Seventieth coast artilleries and a noncommissioned officer of old Battery D. The men are all anxious to join.

Four men injured among the 102 brought here are Chief Engineer E. A. Mercer, skull fractured; T. Christ, carpenter, broken leg and knee cap; Fireman McDermod, skull fractured and body burned; Oiler Singleton, leg broken.

The destroyer Terry arrived this morning badly battered by rough weather. She was in tow of the Relief, which had brought her from Santo Domingo, where she had been aground.

SHIP WILL BE TOTAL LOSS.

Washington, July 15.—Admiral Benson, chief of operations of the navy department, announced this morning he had received dispatches from Charleston saying the marines and crew of the Hector all were saved. Part of the rescued men were landed at the Charleston navy yard and the remainder are aboard vessels in Charleston harbor, he said.

Navy department radiogram from Charleston says the Hector was abandoned at 12:45 o'clock this morning seven miles northeast of Cape Romaine. The vessel will be a total loss as she is broken in two. All hands, the dispatch says, were saved and were brought ashore aboard the lighthouse tender Cypress and the naval tug Wilmington. There were twelve officers and seventy men of the crew in addition to one officer and fifty-six marine recruits from Norfolk and Port Royal, S. C. The master of the Hector is G. F. Newell.

Commandant Bryan, of the Charleston yard, sent the following message to the navy department: "Hector ashore seven miles northeast of the Romaine gas buoy. Abandoned by crew at 12:45 a. m. Ship broken in two and a total wreck. All hands saved. Chief engineer and one fireman seriously injured. Carpenter broken leg. Officers and crew were being taken to Charleston."

Now that the status of the vessel has been fixed so far as the American government is concerned, every possible effort will be made to prevent news of her movements in territorial waters of the United States from reaching the allied warships, which may be waiting off the Virginia coast to intercept her when she starts back to Germany.

SOCIALIST WILL SPEAK.

"ANOTHER COLORADO," SAY LABOR LEADERS OF STRIKE IN THE NORTHERN IRON BELT.

Striking miners and their wives giving money, donated by miners, to Mrs. John Allers, who was widowed and whose children were orphaned when her husband, a miner, was killed in a clash between strikers and men opposing them.

Duluth, Minn., July 14.—Four men have been killed in clashes between striking miners and deputy sheriffs on the iron ridge near this city, where capital and labor are drawn up in battle formation and labor leaders say the strike will be bigger than the Colorado strike of 1913!

They claim the Minnesota branch of the United States steel corporation is even more bitterly opposed to organized labor than were the capitalists of Colorado.

Deputy sheriffs are protecting the property of the steel corporation.

The strikers are armed and Gov. Burnquist has ordered the sheriff of St. Louis county to "arrest forthwith and take before magistrates, preferably at Duluth, all persons who have participated or are participating in riots."

The steel trust, according to labor leaders, is fighting the strikers "with gunmen, detectives, courts and press."

The miners—about 17,000—are demanding $2.75 a day for "top men"; $3 a day for miners in dry places; $3.50 a day for miners in wet place; an 8-hour day, abolition of contract labor, bimonthly pay days, and immediate pay when discharged or quitting.

Strikers say miners in Arizona and Montana are receiving $4.50 a day; that laborers in Butte are getting $4.50 a day, and harvesters everywhere are being paid $4 a day.

The three labor leaders who were arrested have been charged with murder. They had been arrested three times before but had been bailed out by friends. The murder charge was made, labor men declare, so as to hold the leaders in jail.

The funeral of the miner, John Allers, was the occasion of a big labor demonstration. The striking miners carried a huge banner in the funeral procession inscribed, "Murdered by Oliver Gunmen."

The Minnesota national guard is now out of state control on account of the Mexican situation, but the naval militia is available, and it is said, might be called to the iron range to establish military law.

MAIL ROUTES GIVE MORE SERVICE NOW

Changes have been ordered in rural routes out of Fort Wayne and E. C. Miller, postmaster, has announced the following advices from Washington.

To route No. 1, one and three-fourth miles east on the Till road, one-half mile north on the Coldwater road, one and three-fourth miles west on the Du Pont road, and one-fourth mile south on the Lima road, are to be added.

From route No. 1, one-half mile east, one-half mile north, making a total added to route No. 1, of two and a half miles, and a total taken from the route of two miles. This route will now be 27.2 miles long.

Serves More Families.

Six families additional will be served on Route No. 1 on the Till road and the same number of families will get service anew on the Du Pount road. One mile is added to Route No. 2, and the route will be 25.0 miles long.

One-half mile is added to the east on route No. 3, out of Huntertown. The route is 25 miles long.

It has been the effort of Mr. Miller to effect the changes in routes for some time in order that more families could be served. The postoffice department has thus brought them about.

ing alleged. The situation is such that the relations of Italy and Germany seem to have reached a greater tension than at any time since the war began. Before leaving Rome in the spring of 1915, Prince von Buelow, then German ambassador to Italy, concluded an agreement with the Italian government under which, in case of war between Austria and Italy, Germany and Italy pledged themselves to respect the properties and lives of their respective subjects. This meant for Germany a guarantee of several million dollars worth of properties in Italy held by her subjects, and for Italy the safety of 30,000 of her citizens still living in Germany.

The Berlin Bankers association, according to the Stefani news agency, has circularized all banks in Germany, instructing them that henceforth, by request of the imperial foreign office, Italians are to be treated as subjects of a belligerent state, in other words that payments to Italians in Germany are to be stopped.

GERMAN LINES ARE CUT.

Berlin Admits Gain of Territory for England in the Somme.

The British have also occupied Trones wood. The fighting is continuing.

Parts of positions in Skrobowa region, north of the Volhynian sector, which was taken from the Germans by the Russians on July 3, have been recaptured by German troops under Prince Leopold, the war office announced today. More than 1,500 prisoners were taken.

Washington, July 15.—President Wilson today appointed Representative James J. Hay, of Madison, Va., chairman of the house military affairs committee, for judge of the United States court of claims, to succeed Judge George W. Atkinson, who retired for age.

Mr. Hay has represented the Seventh Virginia district in congress for twenty years and since his youth has been a leader in Virginia politics.

He has been the foremost champion of the national guard as the nation's main reliance for defense and to him more than any one man in congress was due the defeat of former Secretary Garrison's plan for organizing a federal continental volunteer army as a reserve behind the regulars. He always has opposed a large regular army but agreed to a considerable increase in the army reorganization bill originally reported by his committee, and to the vastly larger increase to which the house and senate committee compromised.

The court of claims judgship is a life office with a salary of $6,000 a year, and after ten years' service the holder may retire on full pay. Mr. Hay is now about 65 years old.

The nomination came as a surprise as Representative Hay's name had not been mentioned among the numerous applicants. His colleagues believe confirmation will be voted promptly by the senate.

Representative S. H. Dent, of Alabama, ranking democratic member, automatically will become chairman of the military committee for the remainder of the session upon Mr. Hay's retirement.

Washington, July 15.—The coast guard service took up today active direction of efforts to rid the North Atlantic coast of sharks which have cleared many beaches of bathers. The life saving service will render aid.

The plan of the coast guard is to ascertain first whether the sharks are few in number or comprise large schools. If they are not too numerous a cutter will be used to fish for them, but the presence of numbers will necessitate extensive operations. The bureau of fisheries issued a statement declaring there was no reason for panic among bathers.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Huntington, Ind., July 15.—Rev. W. C. Miller, 59, pastor for the past ten years of the SS. Peter and Paul's Catholic church in Huntington, died Friday. He had been ill three weeks. Funeral services will be conducted Monday morning at 10 o'clock. Father Noll will officiate and Bishop Alerding will be in attendance.

Father Miller was born in Germany. He was ordained as a priest in 1881 by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Dwenger, of Fort Wayne. He was placed at the head of the churches in the Nix settlement and Roanoke. He was then transferred to Kentland. Later he came to be head of the Huntington church.

NOBLE COUNTY MAN DROPS DEAD.

Columbia City, Ind., July 15.—Dr. Otto Grisler, of this city, received a call from the Andrew Ennen home in Noble county to hurry to the Ennen farm on account of the serious sickness of Mr. Ennen who had fallen over as he was mowing some weeds near the barn lot. He made a flying trip but when he arrived there he found Mr. Ennen dead. Death apparently had been instantaneous. Mr. Ennen has been in the best of health recently and on Thursday ate his meals as usual. During the afternoon he visited with members of his family and sang a few German songs as they sat on the porch together.

CRIPPLED FOR LIFE.

Auburn, Ind., July 15.—Although the little Garrett child suffering from that dreaded disease, infantile paralysis, may recover, it is almost certain that she will be a cripple for life. The fourteen-months-old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. G. Bloedel was slightly improved today, the attending physician reports, and it is his opinion that she will probably recover, but he is not yet prepared to say that she is at all out of danger. Another probability is that the disease in the form afflicting the Bloedel child is not contagious and that no other cases will develop from it. However, there is no certainty of this and a close quarantine is being maintained over the Garrett home.

Before the Pierceton officers could arrive at that place he had left and his whereabouts at the present time are unknown. Richardson is said to have been drinking for several days and when sobering up was in an ugly mood. He made an attack upon one of the members of his family and is said to have made the threat to kill.

About two weeks ago, while Mr. Speelman was working at his home he fell and broke his leg. Previously he and Miss Smith had decided on Thursday, July 13, as the wedding date. HARRISON HILL FOR CITY'S AVERAGE FAMILIES

The idea that Harrison Hill, which was laid out last year on Calhoun street, directly south of Rudisill boulevard, is strictly a "rich man's addition" is easily dispelled when one realizes that the priceof lots in this tract is but $22 per front foot. This false impression probably started by the fact that every improvement which would be likely to attract home builders to any section, whether it were a "rich man's addition" or not, has been included in Harrison Hill. Wide streets, parks, parkways, playgrounds, etc., are all included in the plat, and Hilgemann and Schaaf, the promoters, state that "although any rich man should be glad to live in Harrison Hill, it is not intended for rich men exclusively." The promoters are located in the North American building and will be glad to give any further information regarding this tract.

NO HOG CHOLERA IN ALLEN COUNTY

While the farmers in other counties are combating the ravages of hog cholera not a single case of it is known by local veterinarians in Allen county. Elkhart county is being troubled with an epidemic of the disease along the Elkhart river, supposed to have been caused by overflo wwater. Farmers are warned to take precautions against the spread of the disease and to use disinfectants thoroughly and keep the hog lots and houses cleaned. Hogs should also be kept away from streams and ditches. These precautions, veterinarians say, will go far to prevent the spread of the disease.

1. If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.
2. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.
3. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.
4. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.
5. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry:
6. For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience:
7. In the which ye also walked sometime, when ye lived in them.
8. But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth.
9. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds;
10. And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him:
11. Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all.

The first four verses illustrate the union of the believer with Christ, now and hereafter. The verses which follow illustrate the results which should follow that union. If all believers everywhere would make Christ their "all in all," what would this world be like?

A Working Congress.

The notification given Friday by Claude Kitchin, democratic house leader in congress, to President Wilson that with the passage of the corrupt practices act the house will have completed its entire legislative program for the present session, serves to emphasize once more the fact that congress under President Wilson's administration has been a working congress. It can point to a record of accomplishment in the handling of really big measures such as have been achieved seldom if ever in the history of the country. Beginning with the tariff revision and the federal reserve laws during the earlier days of the Wilson administration, congress has manifested an admirable purpose to do things worth while. There will be difference of opinion as to the wisdom of some of its legislative acts, because much of the program was a party program, undertaken in response to the plainly-indicated desire of the people who placed democracy in power. There will scarcely be serious question, however, of the purposeful determination with which congress has taken up and carried its work through.

The present house, for example, has had to deal with the Philippine and Porto Rican bills, preparedness legislation, new revenue demands, Mississippi flood control, shipping, rural credits and conservation, all of them items of first importance. In none of these, perhaps, has the desire of everybody been completely met, but in a very large way there has been intelligent and sincere desire to demonstrate a plain responsiveness to public demands and to do what gave most of promise in the interests of the public welfare. The senate is of necessity somewhat behind the house in its program, but it is speeding up with the prospect that final adjournment may come by mid-August. The president has been at times accused as a too insistent and too severe taskmaster in his attitude toward congress, but it has been because the party program was his program and he realized that the responsibility for its performance was also his. Teaming together, the president and congress have a notable record of actual accomplishment in the carrying out of the work to which they addressed themselves.

The nomination of Judge John H. Clarke, of Cleveland, by President Wilson to be the successor of Mr. Hughes on the bench of the supreme court, comes with something of a surprise from the fact that until a day or two previous to the appointment it had not been known that the president had the Cleveland man under consideration. All accounts agree, however, that Judge Clarke is an able lawyer and a fine, upstanding citizen with very pronounced views, a clear sense of justice and a courage that backs up his convictions. His ideas have been progressive, and he has manifested the keenest interest in affairs having to do with the public welfare. In fact, the most serious shortcoming alleged against him is that at 59 years of age he is still a bachelor.

The fact that within the week five cases have been filed in Fort Wayne charging as many fathers with neglect and failure to properly support their children is amply sufficient to justify the indignation, not only of the police department, which must deal with the offenders, but of every right-thinking citizen. It is dereliction of the most heartless and inexcusable sort, and will doubtless result in a vigorous application of that rather new but highly-recommended specific, the "lazy husband" law, which ought to work as well when innocent children are the sufferers as when unfortunate wives alone are forced to bear the burden of a husband who will not provide.

Indianapolis is in the midst of a strenuous campaign to build up a Red Cross organization, and so handsomely are the people responding that more than two thousand members were added in a single day. And the Red Cross is about as fine a manifestation of a splendid spirit as one is able to recall among the various movements that aspire to be helpful in a practical way. Indianapolis is making a record in this direction that is thoroughly admirable.

Colonel Roosevelt, in a letter to a Detroit man, enters a strenuous denial of the charge that he deserted the progressive party, insisting that he stuck with the ship until nine-tenths of the party had fled, and that any insinuation of desertion must be charged against the other fellow and not against the colonel. Those who are seeking the goat in the situation may as well look elsewhere. The colonel doesn't propose to be it.

Six former progressives of more or less distinction are included in the list of eighteen or twenty gentlemen selected by Mr. Hughes to manage the republican national campaign this year, but the presence of the honorable James A. Hemenway, of Indiana, on the roster, indicates clearly that Mr. Hughes is not disposed to have this progressive thing overdone.

OUR OWN OUTLAWS.

We have bandits on the Mexican border and they must be stamped out. They are bad neighbors, and as such must change their habits or give way to orderly and law-abiding folk. We cannot continue to live next door to murderers and robbers. There are bad neighbors here at home in every community. The man who maintains on his premises a dirty, reeking stable where flies breed, and from which a nuisance spreads over the whole neighborhood, may not be a bandit, but he is a menace to his block and must be disciplined. The citizen who maintains on his lot a filthy, annoying, disgusting vault with no drain, permitting the shallow pit to fill and supplying therein a death-breeding center for the typhoid fly, thus endangering the lives of all nearby people, is a public contaminator and must be handled, in a sense, as an outlaw. The bandits commits bloody murder, but the typhoid victim who dies as a result of the neglect of a neighbor is just as dead as a Santa Ysabel massacre victim. And so it is that citizens who study the problems of public health must insist that stables and vaults shall be kept clean; that garbage cans shall be guarded; that tin cans and puddles shall not be permitted to breed mosquitoes, and that trash heaps shall be abolished everywhere. Cleanliness means a disappearance of ilies and mosquitoes and disease-bearing agencies of all sorts, including rats. It is the duty of every citizen to observe all laws and to join his neighbors for cleanliness and health.

Bert J. Martin, the well known city salesman, is so near-sighted that he cannot cross the street or read an order without his glasses. Last week the baby broke his specs and Bert, rather than risk being a target for every passing "jit," stayed home and finally went to bed while his glasses went to Chicago for repairs. Poor foolish boy—Meigs, in the Lyric Theater building, 1012 Calhoun street, would have ground a new one in an hour or so and saved him two days and two dollars.

THE CUCKOO.

Well, Gorgonzola, to start off, the cuckoo is the goof who lies awake nights wondering what the next style in collars

will be. He's the same boob that eats his meals in those invalid chair, steakless emporiums so he'll be able to buy some traffic-stopping neckties.

The big idea with the cuckoo is always to be dressed up like a sore thumb. He's the first bird to trot out a straw roof and the first to prance out in white flannel trousers.

The cuckoo usually can be found in some big office holding down a very important position, opening the mail, running errands and all-round office boy work.

He always is putting up the big front to the frails, like this: "So you like the shirt? I like it myself. I just stocked myself up for the summer; bought $65 worth this noon."

If a cuckoo was grabbed and held by the ankles a nickle and a laundry check would probably roll out on the parquet. Will somebody put the importers of ivory wise that Africa isn't the only place to get it?

Manila, P. I., June 15.—Correspondence of The Associated Press).—The Philippine government has just sold to the government of British India 7,500,000 silver pesos at a profit of close to half a million dollars over the original cost of the currency. The pesos when coined, each contained about thirty cents worth of silver but the price at which they were sold was 38.6 cents.

The phenomenal rise in the price of silver the world over some weeks ago led officials of the insular government to study the question of the wisdom of disposing of a part of the silver hoard which the Philippines purchased at the low prices current in 1902 and 1903. At that time this purchase was made necessary by law to secure the issuance of 34,000,000 pesos of paper currency (silver certificates). A later law, passed in 1906, permitted a large part of this issue of silver certificates to be secured by gold but the government then had in its vaults 34,000,000 silver pesos, coined at a cost of thirty cents apiece.

Some weeks ago J. L. Manning, the insular treasurer, was sent to Hongkong to look into the silver market and to confer with officials of the government of Indian, then in the market for silver. The net result of his trip was the sale of about one-fifth of the government's hoard. The delivery of the silver is to be made at the Manila branch of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking corporation, in lots of a million pesos. The coin is then to be transferred to India, where it is to be melted into bullion in the presence of Insular Auditor C. H. French, who is now enroute to India to fulfil this duty.

Tomorrow the renovated church of the Emmaus congregation will be rededicated to the service of the Lord. Two services will be held, a German service at 10:00 a. m. with celebration of holy communion. Rev. Georgi, of Woodburn, will deliver the dedicatory sermon. Rev. Ph. Wambsganss will preach the confessional sermon. An English service will be held in the evening with the assistant pastor in the pulpit. Special music and singing by the organist, Prof. H. Hahn, and the two Emmaus choirs will be a feature of the services. In the evening, Rev. Ph. Wambsganss will sing several solos.

Fifteen years ago the church was completed. The congregation observed this event by the resolution to have the interior of the church frescoed and painted. For the past twelve weeks the auditorium of the church was closed to public worship and divine services were held in the auditorium of Emmaus hall. In the evening service all members who, during the past fifteen years have been confirmed in the church, will be guests of honor. They will assemble in Emmaus hall and march into the church in a body. The public is invited to both services. The money to defray the expense of renovation has been collected by the ladies of the church. They have raised almost enough money. The remainder will be raised through a special envelope collection which will be taken up in both services tomorrow. The morning service begins at 10 a. m. The evening services at 7:45 p. m.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 15.—William Holton Dye, who was ousted as progressive national committeeman by the resolution of the progressive state committee adopted last Monday, told State Chairman Edwin M. Lee yesterday that he declined to recognize the right of the committee to vacate his seat.

Dye's letter to Lee is as follows:

"Your letter of the 13th received. I am informed by some of the state central committee, who were present, that it does not state the facts. I am told that the resolution was not unanimously passed.

"I cannot be assured from your statement what was done or what was not done at this meeting, and I decline to recognize the right of the committee to take any such action as you state was taken."

Dye Issues Statement.

Dye, who was in Marion, Ind., Thursday when Chairman Lee made public the letter and resolution containing the state committee's decision to oust him as national committeeman, returned to Indianapolis yesterday morning.

The letter of ouster came as a complete surprise to him, but late in the day, after conference with some of his political advisers, he made the following statement:

"This is really a crisis in our nation's history, which demands, on the part of every true progressive, some sacrifices. The progressive vote in most of the states has become very small and the third ticket could not possibly be elected.

"Our country needs concentrated, effective action to preserve it from the dangers of incompetent inefficiency of those in control of the democratic party.

"A large majority of the progressive national committee are of the opinion that Mr. Hughes can and will save the national situation. They believe that he is truly patriotic, of broad vision, with a hatred of 'boss' rule, with a strong desire to have efficient, competent, worthy men in control of the government, instead of mere professional politicians.

"Mr. Hughes has the support of most of the leaders of our great progressive movement — Col. Roosevelt, Gifford Pinchot, Governor Johnson, Garfield, Perkins, and nearly all those other great leaders in whom we put such confidence in 1912. The national committee had a reason to believe that the thing which has happened would happen—namely that the leading progressives would be asked to counsel, advise and direct the Hughes campaign.

"So I voted with thirty-six other national committeemen to indorse Col. Roosevelt's statement, and to indorse Mr. Hughes, but without committing any individual in the party or any state organization to our course, each state being released and given full authority to disband its organization or to maintain it, as they saw fit; to have a state ticket if they saw fit, whether it availed anything or not. We as a committee expressed our view that the election of Mr. Hughes will give to the great body of progressive thinkers in the United States a realization of their aims in a larger measure than in any other way.

"I am sure that the hundreds of thousands of voters in Indiana who take a glimpse of the national situation and the economic dangers which are apt to confront us after this war, thoroughly understand and have implicit confidence in my position and will back the stand that I took at the Chicago conference of the progressive national committeemen. They will realize that this is not a time for the fostering of petty grudges or the cultivation of jealousy; that it is not a time to act through pique or prejudice of party hatred. The welfare of our country is the first thing under consideration. It is a time for co-operative citizenship, endeavoring to obtain in the quickest, most effective way permanent peace, prosperity and progress for America and her people.

"And to do this we must vote in a way that will guarantee the greatest measure of success of the principles for which progressives have been so nobly fighting in a way that will attain for the progressives the most effective control or participation in the handling of the country's affairs. We must avoid absolutely any possibility of the organization which we have built up being used by persons for the satisfaction of selfish greed or as a means of revenge to satisfy bitter personal disappointment. We must always remember that it is not party emblem or party name for which we have striven, but the permanent establishment of progressive principles whenever and wherever and to whatever extent it could be done."

Dye's defense of the action of the committee, together with his complete ignoring of the progressive state chairman's references of the action of the "committee of nine," will present national committee representation, as well as the question of delegate representation from the counties of Indiana, as live issues on the floor of the progressive state convention at the Odd Fellow building Thursday.

Famous Photo Play "Where Are My Children?" Closes Tonight.

The film opens with the trial of a physician who has been accused of circulating obscene literature because he has been giving out propaganda on birth control among the illiterate, the sick, insane and criminally inclined. By a series of flash backs some of the scenes of desolations and sufferings among which children are reared in the slums of our cities are projected until one is tempted to cry out "let them propogate no more." From that point the story takes up the denial of children by the educated, the wealthy and the healthy, depicting the sufferings and mental tortures that follow in the wake of these transgressions against nature's laws.

BY LOIS CRANE.

Cinderella gazed disconsolately at her reflection in the mirror—a sorry sight. In spite of all her efforts, her flimsy skirt slumped at her ankles like a beaten cur. She had experiment with all sorts of patterns, but, like false friends, they refused to come to her aid. Vainly did she try to solve the problem of how to attain the bouffant effect flaunted by her stepsisters and the other fashionables.

The clock struck twelve, and her godmother appeared. Immediately the good woman set to work with her wand. A few moments and what a remarkable transformation. Cinderella beheld herself no longer dowdy, but attired in accordance with the latest silhouette. Piquantly her skirts stood out in the bouffant effect she long desired. Her fairy godmother had indeed used a witching wand—some call it Wichtex. This supple fabric is suitable for interlinings. Resilient and very light, it accomplishes the purpose of hoops or crinoline. Many of the leading contours depend on Wichtex to achieve the flaring silhouette demanded by Paris. This fabric is also a great boon to the home dressmaker. By using it for interlinings in skirts and coats, bouffant effects may be obtained with little difficulty.

Separate skirts and shirt waists hold a permanent place in the American woman's wardrobe. For business and sport they have been proven practical, as well as becoming. The separate skirt is just now especially popular. The vogue for sweaters and sport coats renders it indispensable. In the striking model illustrated here, taffeta in huge black and white checks is featured. Wichtex is responsible for the extreme flaring skirt. A band, knee depth, was used as an interlining. The bag pockets are quaint, and in a season of pockets attract more than their share of attention.

WHITE DOTS EMBROIDERED ON CHIFFON

ONE never knows just how hand embroidery is apt to be applied to a frock. Surely no one ever thought of embroidering white dots on chiffon, but here is proof that it can be done, and successfully, too.

Dark blue being the background for the dots, they are all the more conspicuous. In fact, they should prove very cooling, for they suggest a quiet fall of snowflakes.

HAND WORK FOR THE STYLISH BABY

IT IS always such a disappointment to see hours of fine hand work made up into a baby's frock that is anything but graceful or stylish. It seems such a waste of effort. Of course, some designs call for unbecoming lines for the wee frocks, but if you are wise you will select for your embroidery only a yoke design and a "repeat" which can be applied to a skirt or ruffle.

and hand-run tucks. Finest nainsook is the material. The little yoke, after it has been embroidered, has been cut quite deep, so that it gives a long shoulder line and necessitates only a tiny ruffle for a sleeve. To this yoke the skirt is set, after a panel of fine tucks, almost pin tucks, has first been run by hand back and front.

A fine French seam beading should be used at every seam. The embroidered ruffle is then set on with beading. As a finish a pointed edge of the material is added to the ruffle and sleeves. This is made by folding bias pieces of material and stitching them in points along the edge of the ruffles.

NOVELTY FOR THE CHILDREN

HAVE you seen the new pajamas for the babies and children? They are made of crepe, and are cool and comfortable, besides being a delight to the children. They come in pink, blue, white or flowered, made just like "grown-ups'" pajamas, excepting that they button across the back. In spite of the extreme summer heat, the evenings are quite frequently cool, so that if the children should get uncovered they will not catch cold. The little bedroom slippers to match can be obtained at a very reasonable price.

To Remove Rust Stains

Have you any remedy for removing rust stains? They are so ugly, and I can't wear the skirt as it is. Mrs. D. G.

Use for a Raincoat

I have a raincoat that is perfectly good in some places and worn out in others. I was wondering if you could suggest a way to repair it. Mrs. T. E.

It depends upon where the worn-out places are: If in the hem or in the seams it would be very simple to paste them together again. If you have any small children you could make a very nice raincoat for them out of it if you find you can not mend it for yourself.

GIFTS SMALL BUT THOUGHTFUL

ARE you following the "small gift" craze? Has the high cost of living sent you out scooting after the little remembrance which will bring a good thought for some auspicious occasion, but will not rob the penny bank for months? Then listen to these artistic little reminders, which may all be had for less than a hundred pennies.

For the friend who likes auto outings select a wooden bucket, which is of cardboard, square and folds up into a small flat box, all nicely decorated and telling in verse the story of its contents.

If you know a girl who is having her own troubles in a third-floor back, just parcel post her this small clothesline reel, to show her that she has a thoughtful friend to remember her.

It's preserving time, and jelly glass lids are always getting lost. Make your special Mrs. Housewife happy by a set of paper ones, all nicely folded into a wee box.

Maybe this same housewife will like an ironing pad, all nicely embroidered, with a beeswax pad to go with it. She will also find use in the hot weather for a paper bag for the ice, which keeps it from melting from under her very eyes when the thermometer soars.

A set of three invaluable kitchen utensils take on airs when they come all tied up in a pretty box. They are an egg separator, a spoon rest and a milk bottle cap lifter and top combined.

IN BASQUE EFFECT

AS AN outcome of the vogue for blouses with peplums, women are now offered a blouse in true basque effect—that is, while the blouse boasts of no peplum it is made to be worn outside the skirt. It buttons down the front with buttons too small and too numerous to count. The deep girdle and the convenient pockets are of blue taffeta, while the rest of the basque is of blue chiffon. Long, tight-fitting sleeves emphasize the basque idea. A full puff of taffeta placed just beneath the shoulder breaks the monotony of the long line. White liberty satin is used for a high, soft collar, a tiny vest and a frill at the cuffs.

Another type of basque is made of blue and white striped taffeta. The front closes in surplice line, fastening with two buttons of cut steel, below the line of a deep yoke. Unlike the first basque, the sleeves are elbow length and are trimmed with ruches of the silk from the edge half way to the shoulder.

IT really seems as if there were no article of furniture which you could not get in that delightful summery material, wicker, for the porch. Every kind of an easy chair, all sorts of tables, bookcases and low tabarets can be found in the wicker weaving. Now there is a wicker birdcage posed on a standard, which shows several wicker holders for flower vases in the course of its length. There is a porch swing of wicker also, all ready to be attached by ropes or chains to the porch roof. Then there are what one might term "carry-alls." They vary in size from the huge basket which resembles the log basket to be found at the side of a fireplace, to smaller ones large enough to serve a half dozen glasses of lemonade or iced tea. Really, they may be used as general catch-alls on the porch to hold books and newspapers, a tennis racquet or a stray magazine.

A high stand of wicker with a sunken metal receptacle for a fern is the climax of wicker loveliness. All these articles can be bought in plain wicker and enameled to match any color scheme.

MONKEYS TO SAVE NATION'S BABIES.

Medical experts leading the fight to stamp out infantile paralysis have sent an appeal to the zoos of America for monkeys for use in experiments to find a preventative and cure for the dreaded disease.

There is need for an immediate supply of the simians, say health authorities, if they are to prevent a widespread epidemic of the scourge that is taking a death toll in New York of more than one baby every hour.

Orders for large numbers of monkeys have been sent to South America and other countries where the primates abound, but the shipments will not be available for at least thirty days. Time is essential to effective warfare against the disease.

Practically all that is known about infantile paralysis has been learned through experiments on monkeys in laboratories of the medical world.

Monkeys do not contract this particular disease, but in some ways they are so much like man they offer the greatest chance for experiments.

There are other diseases to which the monkey is just as susceptible as human beings. Many contract tuberculosis and pneumonia.

There are many paralytic diseases similar to infantile paralysis that are known to occur among monkeys, but infantile paralysis is peculiar to man.

MAKING APPEAL TO REVOLUTION CHIEFS

Peking, June 15.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press).—President Li Yuan-hung has appealed through personal telegrams for the co-operation of prominent revolutionary leaders in restoring peace and uniting the north and south. Tang Shao-yi, formerly premier under Yuan Shi-kai, Kang Yu-wei, who inspired many reforms in Emperor Kuang Hsu and was forced by the empress dawager to flee for his life in 1898, and Liang Chi-chao, the most famous disciple of Kang Yu-wei, are among the reformers Li Yuan-hung has asked to assist in the movement to bring about peace.

The following is a translation of a telegram which has been sent by the president to many influential revolutionists: "Heaven has afflicted China and disasters and disturbances have arrived in succession. On the 6th instant President Yuan Shi-kai died of illness, and I succeeded him the next day in accordance with the provisions made in the law of the country. At this time of political storm, there is an empty exchequer, and the country is exhausted. Being a man of little ability, I feel that I am unable to hold so great a responsibility. As you are men of profound learning, I hope that you will give me advice in all important state affairs."

Kang Yu-wei lived in America for many years after he was forced to leave China because the empress dowager had placed a price on his head. He also resided for some time in Japan. Liang Chi-chao also lived abroad for a long time, chiefly in Japan.

Efforts to get these leaders to Peking have been futile. They apparently have no intention of coming to the Chinese capital at this time. Consequently informal negotiations are in progress at Shanghai, and the Peking government hopes to arrange for a more formal conference in that city preparatory to reconciling the north and the south.

China is really divided into three sections politically at the present time. The four southernmost provinces are under the sway of Cantonese leaders. Tsai Ao, who inaugurated the present revolution, is probably the best known leader in the four southernmost provinces, but he has remained constantly in Yunnan province, far west of Canton, and consequently has not participated in the deliberations at Canton.

Central China, or the Yang-tse valley country, is practically dominated by the military. General Feng Kuo-chang at Nanking, and General Ni Shi-chung are the foremost leaders in that section.

(Here is the British view of the trip of the German super-submarine Deutschland from Germany to the United States, as voiced by Hector Bywater, member of the Navy league and associate editor of the Navy League Annual, the most authoritative work of the kind in the world, in a special interview for The Sentinel.

For several years prior to the outbreak of the war, Bywater was stationed at Berlin to watch German naval activities. His views on the exploit of the Deutschland probably coincide with those of the British admiralty because he is in close touch with that body. Bywater is in the United States on a special mission.—EDITOR).

BY J. HERBERT DUCKWORTH.

New York, July 15.—Great Britain will not tremble at the exploit of the German U-boat Deutschland in making a trip from Germany to the United States, according to Hector Bywater, member of the Navy league and associate editor of the Navy League Annual.

"Of actual practical value the achievement is worth absolutely nothing. It will not release England's strangle hold of Germany's overseas commerce. It will not save her from economic starvation. One small British tramp, or which are scores in New York now, can carry as much as 50 costly underwater liners.

"From a picturesque point of view the trip was admirable, but there is nothing surprising about it. At least sixteen British submarines, most of them of American origin, but some designed and built in Canada, made the trip across the Atlantic to Gibraltar, then to the Dardanelles over a year ago, and some of these submarines were only half the size of the Deutschland.

"For this voyage the Deutschland had to take out all armament, the torpedo tubes and torpedoes, which are extremely bulky and take up a lot of space. The room and weight thus saved could be devoted to oil which would almost double the cruising capacity.

"No unusual problems of navigation are to be met in a voyage in a submarine across the Atlantic. The trip is hard on the men as there are few facilities for exercise.

"Another thing which makes the performance considerably less remarkable than the feats that have been accomplished by allied submarines is that from the moment Capt. Koenig got clear of the German coast until he arrived off the American coast he had open water all the way. No hostile mine fields had to be navigated and no war vessels had to be avoided. The only possible danger was from allied cruisers.

"The voyage of the Deutschland cannot be compared with trips constantly made by British submarines during the Dardanelles operations when they passed, time after time, through the Straits which had been literally honeycombed with mines and nets.

"When war broke out England had nearly completed the submarines Nautilus and Swordfish which are 950 ton vessels, and she has since built submersibles of over 1,000 tons. The Deutschland's gross tonnage, according to the bill of health given by the American consul in Bremen, is 791.

"A suggestion that Germany intends to maintain a regular submarine service across the Atlantic does not appeal as a practical proposition as the space available for cargo is extremely limited. The aggregate cargo of almost 50 of the largest submarines which Germany is said to possess would total up to less than the corresponding capacity of a small tramp.

"In carrying papers and valuable and rare chemicals such a line of submarines might be very profitable to the owners, but I feel the scheme will not do very much to help Germany."

Thirty-five years ago today, on July 15, 1881, John N. Rohyans, known by his intimate associates as "Jack" Rohyans, began work in the clerical department of the Pennsylvania shops, under Shop Clerk Thomas Meegan. In March, 1883, the clerical department of the Northwest motive power system was established and Mr. Rohyans was transferred, becoming one of the five clerks employed in that department at the start. He remains there in a responsible clerical capacity. From five men, of which J. T. Leary, auditor of the Baltimore and Ohio, was one, the department has expanded until it now includes over fifty. Mr. Rohyans is also a member of the Pennsylvania Employes' Veteran association, and has held office in that society ever since it was organized. He is a native of Germany and came with his parents to America when he was only thirteen years old.

"We need labor of all kinds," said Employment Agent W. F. Melching of the General Electric works, this morning. "We have today good positions with steady employment to offer to several hundred men and women. All kinds of skilled and unskilled laborers are needed and will be given positions at once," said Mr. Melching. The General Electric works has increased its working force several hundred in the past two years and as soon as the big shops now under construction on Wall street are up and equipped, 2,000 more men and women will be needed. The pay rolls now contain upwards of 2,600 names and provision can be made at present in the shops for several hundred more men and women and the management is anxious to get them.

LABORER BADLY HURT

John Nessel, a laborer at the Wabash shops, a part of whose duties is to ice the drinking water tanks in the offices and shops, was severely hurt this morning as he attempted to lower a big piece of ice from the door of the icehouse to the ground. It got beyond control and fell upon him, bruising and spraining his hips. Mr. Nessel was taken to the Wabash hospital at Peru on train No. 1, at noon today. The injured man is unmarried.

MAY PUT UP NEW PRESIDENT.

Cleveland papers say that there is a likelihood of a change in the official roster of the Nickel Plate when reorganization takes place that will involve the retirement from the presidency of William H. Canniff and the election of John J. Benet, vice president of the New York Central company. Mr. Benet is forty-eight years old. He learned the blacksmith's trade and spent five years of his early life at the forge. Then he acquired the telegraph trade and began service with the N. Y. C. in the capacity of an operator. Thence he passed through a series of promotions which led to his present office, which he has occupied about two years.

WILL HAVE BIG CROWD

Division Passenger Agent W. H. Shorey, of the Wabash, who has been working in the interest of the excursion to St. Louis, which leaves this city at 10 o'clock tonight, expects a big crowd. Excursions to that city have not been very frequent, but the growing interest in them will result in more large crowds. In making note of the excursion tonight, it was erroneously stated by one of the city papers that the special train would leave at 10 o'clock this morning. It leaves at 10 o'clock tonight.

The game is to decide to whom the game of last week, which was a tie, belongs.

HEAT INTERFERES WITH WORK.

Up to 2 o'clock this afternoon Capt. H. C. HORSES CARRY PART OF BRAINS IN U. S. WORLD-BEATING CAVALRY

El Paso, Texas, July 2.—Investigation in military quarters here leads me to the conclusion that one portion of the brains of the United States cavalry lies in the fine heads of its horses.

I attended a troop drill at Fort Bliss. Down the parade ground came the line of horses at a sharp trot. They were the same kind of animals that accomplished the wonderful march of 110 miles in Mexico in 42 hours.

Suddenly, a few shrill, ascending notes of a bugle rang out. Every horse turned to the right, without waiting for the pinch of a bit or the touch of a knee. They knew what the call meant, just as well as their riders.

Squads right, column right, squads left, right turn, right by squads—they went through them all without a break. Their ears seemed to quiver for the signal. At the "charge" they galloped down the field with a thunder of hoofs that beat as evenly as a hundred giant drums.

The tricks of circus horses seemed simple by comparison. Yet, the amazing spectacle was the result of only a few months training of animals bought "green" from the farms and sales stables of the whole country.

The horse in the cavalry is considered as an animal of a SINGLE IDEA. The men who train him have no false illusions regarding his "almost human intelligence." They know an animal cannot reason beyond the limit of his own experience. So they reason with him BY ACTS ALONE.

A trooper may talk to his horse. In fact, some get the habit of telling their mounts all their private troubles and really believe the horses understand.

However, in the matter of purely military training, few words are ever used. The horse soon learns there are certain general rules governing all bugle calls. Ascending notes indicate the movement is to be to the right. Descending notes that the movement is to the left. The signals are distinguished as the common "Whoa!" and "Giddap!"

The first object in the training of a cavalry horse is to eliminate his fear of unfamiliar objects. When he shies at a gun, or a flag, he is allowed to touch or smell it. A good horse shies only at objects which he is afraid will hurt him.

Troopers who train the horses are selected for intelligence and natural love of horses. Army officers recognize that horses respond to the affection of a human being.

Punishment is given only when necessary and then only immediately after the offense is committed, so the horse may know why he is punished. A trooper who punishes a horse in anger may be punished himself.

Every man in the cavalry is taught that under harsh treatment the horse will become timid, then sullen and at length violent and unmanageble. After punishment, the horse is always treated with great kindness.

Green horses are made accustomed to shoeing by frequent tapping on their feet. Every trooper is instructed to handle his horse so the animal will learn that he does not have to kick to protect himself when a man grasps his legs.

Every man in the cavalry has to memorize this paragraph from the book of cavalry drill regulations:

"Every action of the trooper should tend to induce full confidence that no harm is intended to the horse and that nothing but kind treatment is to be expected."

WHAT HAVE YOU GIVEN?

Cincinnati Manager Consents to Transfer if Herrmann Desires It.

Cincinnati, July 15.—Charles Herzog, manager of the Cincinnati Nationals said today that he had consented to his transfer to some other club if President August Herrman desired to make a trade.

Herrmann is at present in New York, where he is reported to have been in conference with President Hempstead, of the New York Nationals regarding a deal for Herzog. It is said that Hempstead will accompany Herrman to Cincinnati and that they will meet Herzog and endeavor to arrange the final terms of the deal.

Herzog has been manager of the Cincinnati team for the past two years and a half, coming here from New York in the spring of 1914 in exchange for Bob Becher and outfield and catcher Hartley. Hartley joined the federal league before the season started and never reported here.

The case of J. McGraw, manager of the New York Nationals, who was charged yesterday in a warrant sworn to by John T. Reed, a Cincinnati "fan," with disorderly conduct, was continued until August 29, in the municipal court here today. The case of Shortstop Fletcher of the Giants, on a like charge, was continued to the same date.

McGraw and Fletcher were represented by an attorney whom they had engaged before they departed for St. Louis last night.

FIXING UP THE DEAL.

New York, July 15.—President H. N. Hempstead, of the New York league club, and Garry Herrmann, of the Cincinnati club, were in conference here today relative to a deal which may involve one or more players of the Giants to be exchanged for Charles Herzog, manager of the Cincinnati team. None of the officials of the local club would discuss the status of the proposed deal, but it was intimated that a statement might be forthcoming later.

It was reported that among the players being considered by the Cincinnati club were Pitcher Christy Mathewson, Captain Larry Doyle, the Giants second baseman; Arthur Fletcher, shortstop, and Infielder McKechnie.

MAKE DEMAND FOR SANFORD

Columbus, N. M., July 15.—United States authorities at El Paso today asked military officers here to turn over to them for trial Tandy Sanford, who is suspected of taking part in the Villa raid at Columbus.

Sanford was captured by Gen. Pershing's men at Ascencion, Mex., in April. The charge against him at El Paso is that in October, 1914, he shipped a carload of ammunition into Mexico, in violation of neutrality laws, to a filibustering expedition of Mexicans who had just crossed the border.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 15.—An unusual case was acted on favorably by Governor Ralston yesterday when he signed a pardon for Fred Connor, alias George Ray, who fifteen years ago escaped from the Indiana reformatory and never was recaptured to serve the remainder of his sentence. The man now is serving a term in the Ohio penitentiary, having been sentenced to that institution Sept. 23, 1909, for a long term for safe blowing.

The governor issued a pardon on a showing that Connor's record has been clear in the Ohio prison and was excellent in the Indiana reformatory up to the time of his escape. Friends and relatives of the prisoner urged executive clemency in order that Connor might have a better chance to obtain a parole from the Ohio institution.

The governor, in addition to granting paroles to six men and remitting fines in three cases, announced that he would not issue the parole approved a few days ago in the case of John Grube, a "trusty" at the Indiana reformatory. Grube escaped from the institution at almost the same time the governor had indicated approval of the pardon board's recommendation that the prisoner be paroled.

Five prisoners at the state farm will receive paroles to become employes of Gentry Bros.' Dog and Pony show. The men affected by this action are Henry Lenfors, Clayton Menard, Walter Durbin, Donald Glasscock and Otho Dearing. Fourteen men recently obtained paroles to start work with the Gentry shows, half of their wages to be turned over to C. E. Talkington, superintendent of the farm, to be paid the men upon the expiration of their sentences.

Virgil May, who was sentenced from Clay county, November 14, 1914, to a term of two to fourteen years in the reformatory for assault and battery with intent to commit a felony, will receive a parole. It was shown that May was convicted on circumstantial evidence and that he has a wife and child dependent upon him for support. Clemency was also recommended by Thomas C. Daily, president of the board of trustees of the institution, in behalf of the board.

Fines Remitted.

Cahill was granted clemency at the request of the trial judge and various other persons familiar with the case. They asserted that Cahill, who is only 19 years old and an orphan, has no means of paying the fine. Barr will be freed from the Elkhart county jail in order to provide for his wife, who is said to be sorely in need of his support. Chowning, it was shown, in addition to having been a model prisoner, should be permitted to care for his wife, who has just been discharged from a hospital.

Charleston, S. C., July 15.—Tales of the unsuccessful fight of the naval collier Hector against a gale which blew from 110 to 120 miles an hour, great seas, fires and disabled engines and the daring rescue of 102 men by the Wellington were brought here today by the first survivors to land.

The Wellington, storm battered and having lost her two barges, worked for six hours taking off the crew and sixty marines which the Hector was taking from Port Royal to Guantanamo. Captain Joseph Newell, of the Hector, and about 20 men were taken off later by the steamer Cypress, and the broken Hector was left to her fate, seven miles northeast of Cape Romaine. No member of the ship's company was lost but four were hurt.

The Hector left Charleston lightship Wednesday. Thursday morning she ran into the worst of the hurricane sweeping up the coast. Huge waves broke over the vessel and poured down the hatches, flooding the holds and disabling the engines. When she was unable to make way, wireless calls for help were sent out.

As the big collier rolled at the mercy of the wind which was driving her toward Cape Romaine, fires broke out in the hold. They did not gain headway but added to the terror of those aboard.

The Wellington reached the collier at one o'clock Friday afternoon. The Hector's launch had been disabled by the storm but a small boat with all hands at work succeeded in reaching the Wellington. The dangerous work of transferring the men was immediately started and continued for six hours. Captain Newell with about a score of men elected to remain on the forward part of the Hector, which then had almost parted at about midships. The Wellington started for this port and the Cypress set out to take off Captain Newell as it seemed certain there was no chance to save the collier. At 8 o'clock last night Captain Newell and the men who remained with him were forced to leave the Hector.

There were five men aboard each of the barges the Wellington lost while trying to tow them from Philadelphia to Jacksonville. The Wellington left today to search for them.

The surface of the moon began to clear about 11 o'clock and by 12:30 was giving full light again.

Effect of Terrific Rain Seen at County Building.

Heavy rains of Friday afternoon caused water to stand on the floors of the anteroom and the main room of the court of county commissioners, in the court reporters room in the southeast section of the building and in one of the lavatories on the first floor.

With the sewers overflowing and the large down spouts taking the heavy rainfall from the roof, the water was forced up through the water basins in the rooms of the county commissioners and in the lavatory. There was some water in the basement but not enough to do much damage.

CARRIED AWAY HIVE OF BEES

Newcastle, Ind., July 15.—Carrying home a hive of bees, found on a public lot, would not be a job that many would care to undertake, but to have to carry it back where the bees were found, would be exasperating to say the least. However, this was the penalty imposed on George Payne, charged with petit larceny in police court this morning. On his way home, in the south part of the city, a few days ago Payne saw a hive of bees on a public dump and proceeded to carry it home. It so happened that the hive had belonged to James Ball. The bees had left home and swarmed on the dump. Ball moved the hive to the dump hoping that they would again enter it. When Ball located his bees he filed an affidavit charging petit larceny against Payne.

Paris, July 15.—(6:37 p. m.)—Professor Elie Metchnikoff, the famous bacteriologist is dead.

Professor Elie Metchnikoff was world-famous as an exponent of theories for the prolongation of human life. He was popularly known as the great advocate of the 'sour milk cure" for old age, believing that the principal agent in senile decay was the continuous auto-intoxication of the body through the putrefaction of matter in the large intestine and that the bacteria which cause such putrefaction could be effectively combated by preparations of milk soured by cultures of selected lactic acid bacilli. Later Professor Metchnikoff went so far as to declare that the large intestine was as useless in the human body as is the appendix, and prophesied that the day would come when it would be a commonplace operation to remove it.

He was the discoverer in 1912 of a new microbe which he called the "glycobacteria" in the intestines of a dog and in a paper before the French Academy of Scences he announced his belief that the inoculation of the large intestine in human beings with this germ would go still further than the sour milk treatment toward the prevention of senile decreptitude. The "glycobacteria," it was explained, were sugar bacilli of which the large intestine stood in need because the sugar that was ordinarily taken into the body had already been digested and obsorbed by the blood before it reached the large intestinal tract.

Of this discovery, Professor Metchnikoff himself said: "In the course of my recent researches I found that there exists in the large intestine of human beings a certain quantity of poisonous substances, which are called indols and phenols, and which have been proved responsible for the gradual decay of the system, known as old age. These can be destroyed only by sugar, but in the ordinary way any sugar or sugary substances taken into the system are digested long before they can reach that far. This applies to some extent to the lactic acid treatment which I have advocated for some time past. The problem has been, therefore, to discover some means of producing sugar within the colon by some means after digestion, and my present claim is that I have found a sugar-producing microbe, which I call 'glycobacteria' and which is only to be found in the intestines of the dog. It may be objected that dogs are not specially long lived. My answer to this is that the dog is a carniverous animal and it is proved beyond doubt that animal food produces the largest quantity of these poisonous substances which it is our aim to destroy. Should it be possible to give a dog a large quantity of vegetables, he would undoubtedly be immune from a great many diseases which are now caused by the presence in his intestines of poisonous indols and phenols."

Experimented on Himself.

In the course of his studies, Professor Metchnikoff experimented upon himself to some extent as well as upon animals, and it is said that he inoculated himself with the new "glycobacteria." His theory as to the sour milk treatment may be traced in part to the environment of his youth. He was a Russian, born at Kharkoff, May 15, 1845. In that region and particularly in neighboring Bulgaria a surprisingly large portion of the inhabitants live to be centenarians, and Metchnikoff believes that their longevity was due largely to the fact that their diet included the bacilli of sour milk.

Following his education at Kharkoff, Metchnikoff studied at Giessen and Munich, and in 1870 he was appointed professor of zoology at Odessa. He held this post until 1882, when he resigned to devote himself to private researches into the anatomy of invertebrates. It was while working at lowly organized forms of life, such as sponges, that he first made the observations which constituted the basis of all his subsequent work. In 1888 he had attracted the notice of Louis Pasteur, the founder of the famous Pasteur institute for the treatment of rabies in Paris, and he was invited to become one of Pasteur's associates. In 1895 he succeeded as the director of the institute, a post which he held to the time of his death.

Should Live to Be 150.

In his study of longevity, Prof. Metchnikoff came to the belief that it should not be uncommon for people to live to the age of 150 years. He found every indication that the human mechanism was calculated to last far longer than it actually does. His researches showed among other things that animals which had no large intestines, lived to an advanced age particularly birds which preserve their youth, agility and spryness to the end of their long span. In the case of human beings he found that even among those whose sufferings were terrible, there were few who wanted to be put out of their agony by death. They all wanted to live. "This," said Metchnikoff, "shows that death between the ages of 60 and 80 is not natural. It should not occur so soon. There is some cause for it, which should be discovered and remedied." If the normal specific longevity were attained by human beings he believed that old and not degenerate individuals would lose the instinct for life and acquire an instinct for death and that as they had fulfilled the normal cycle of life, they would accept death with the same relieved acquiescence as they now accept sleep.

On his seventieth birthday, 1915, Prof. Metchnikoff was presented with a golden book forming a unique record of the latest scientific researches, signed by men of science of the day. Although there was much controversy in the scientific world regarding his original ideas, he was fully recognized as one of the most eminent bacteriologists.

He was the author of a number of books, including "The Nature of Man," "Immunity in Effective Diseases," "Prolongation of Human Life," and "Optimistic Essays."

In 1908 the Nobel prize for medical research was divided between the late Dr. Paul Ehrlich, of Berlin, and Prof. Metchnikoff. The $20,000 which he thus received he devoted entirely to the furtherance of his scientific researches. Personally he was not well off, and throughout his long life sacrificed all but the plainest living necessities to the cause of science.

Two of the men indicted are Harold J. Bryant, general manager of the company, and William F. Greenwood, treasurer, with offices in the Westminster building, Chicago. The others are William A. Otis, president, and Percy Hagerman, vice-president, of Colorado Springs, Col.

Six Charges Made.

Six counts are contained in the indictment, three charging a conspiracy to devise a scheme to fraudulently use the mails in inducing persons to buy lands in the Florida Everglades, and three charging the actual use of the mails in furtherance of the alleged scheme.

The company was organized, according to federal officials, in 1909, to take title to 67,000 acres of land, for which it paid $2 an acre. The firm was capitalized at $275,000, most of the stock being held by the officials. The gross proceeds are said to have been about $1,000,000.

The property was divided, it is alleged, into 4,860 parcels, from ten to 240 acres each. The sales began in 1909 and in 1910 almost all of the land was disposed of. Contracts were made with the purchasers for an undivided interest in the property for $240 at $10 a month.

Draw Lots for Land.

An alleged auction was held in which the purchasers made unifor mbids of $240 each, the government charges, and then lots were drawn to allot the various parcels.

Contracts were sold by agents who received from $30 to $40 for each sale. The first installment is said to have been collected by the agent and subsequent ones through the mails.

The indictments charge misrepresentation through the mails concerning the provisions for drainage and reclamation, the fertility of the soil, the lack of need of fertilizer, freedom of the country from frost and th elow cost of clearing for cultivation.

About fifty persons are named in the indictment as having been defrauded in the alleged scheme. It is stated by federal officials that approximately 4,200 lost money on it.

Chicago, July 15.—Seven hundred and fifty fighting mad Chicago Shriners spent part of last night on the steamship South American, tied up at the docks of the Grand Trunk railroad in Detroit. They were returning from the Buffalo conclave on the chartered boat when the captain called at the port to take on new firemen. The boat was libeled by Deputy United States Marshal Caldwell, and the joke is that the dozen libellants are Knights Templar.

About a year ago Detroit Knights Templar chartered the steamer to take them to the state conclave at Calumet. They all got sick with typhoid and ptomaines, they assert. Since then they have been "laying" for the ship, so when it called at Detroit, Marshal Caldwell—one of the sick a year ago—was on the job. A bond of $80,000 was demanded. Suits filed against the owners, the Chicago, Duluth and Georgian Bay Transit company, aggregate $73,000. The libel was based on these suits.

Marshal Caldwell was adamant. He said he didn't care if every potentate of Masonry was aboard he and his fellow Templars intended to have their revenge. Shriners, also, according to dispatches, put aside the brotherly love stuff long enough to express themselves more forcefully than elegantly over the action of the brother Templars. At a late hour the vessel was allowed to proceed on the owners' assurance they would give bond next week.

Indianapolis, July 15.—Rip Van Winkle, who slept for twenty years, had "nothing on" the conscience of a mysterious individual who can be known only as "A. B. C.," for after a period of at least forty-one years he paid a bill of $40 to the Pettis Dry Goods company.

The money was sent in the shape of four Canadian $10 bills from Montreal, and was inclosed in a printed note which read:

"This belongs to A. P. Pettis and Andrew Dickson. Please give half to each or their heirs. (Signed.) A. B. C."

As it was prior to 1875 that the New York store was owned by Pettis, Dickson & Co., it is evident that this "conscience fund" contributor is settling for some funds taken, or a debt contracted, at least forty-one years ago.

The letter and its contents were received by George A. Gay, president of the New York store, who credited the account of Mr. Pettis and sent one-half the proceeds to George M. Dickson, general manager of the National Motor Vehicle company, son of Andrew Dickson. Mr. Dickson after receiving the money said he would give it to his mother as the proper recipient. Part of the letter from Mr. Gay to Mr. Dickson is as follows:

"Whether or not the world is getting better I do not know, at any rate the inclosed letter would indicate that it is. This party, whoever he may be, is apparently anxious to rectify a wrong. He has been forty years thinking it over, but better late than never. It is not unusual for us to have conscience money returned, but we have never had any money returned after such a long lapse as this. This money will enable you to enlarge your plant again and continue the prosperity which I understand your company is now having and which I have no doubt is largely due to your efforts."

London, July 15.—The revolt against Turkish rule in Arabia is making progress, having resulted in the complete wiping out of all traces of Turkish resistance at Mecca, according to a Reuter dispatch from Cairo today.

After the fall of Mecca on June 13, says the dispatch, certain elements of the garrison continued their resistance in forts near the city. In order to avoid blood shed the grand sheriff, in command of Arabian forces, suspended attacks. The forts have now surrendered, according to today's advices, the captures of the Arabians including 28 officers, 950 unwounded men, 150 wounded, four guns and a large quantity of material and munitions.

Since the proclamation of Arabian independence the total captures of Turks include ten field pieces, ten mountain guns, 15 machine guns, 100 officers, 2,500 soldiers and 150 civil functionaries.

YOUR UNCLE HONUS IS COMING STRONG

Wagner Climbs Into Third Place Among National League Swatters.

Chicago, July 15.—John (Honus) Wagner ran his average up eight points to .333 and took third place among the batters of the National league this week, according to averages printed here today, which include the records of last Wednesday's games. Dave Robertson leads, however, though Jake Daubert has cut down the difference and is hitting .336 to Robertson's .344. Max Carey, of Pittsburg, is ahead in stolen bases with 27; Max Flack, of Chicago, in sacrifice hits with 27; Williams, of Chicago, in home runs with ten and in total bases with 134, and Burns, New York, in runs scored with 55. Brooklyn leads in club batting with .254. The National's .300 batters, among those who have played in half or more of the games, are:

Leading pitchers for fourteen or more games:

Tris Speaker has regained the lead in the American league, running his average up to .387, while Joe Jackson fell down during the week from .381 to .365. Cobb gained twelve points and presses Jackson hard with .355. The speedy Detroiter has 31 stolen bases, which indicates he will have to hurry on the lines the remaining half of the season to attain his ambition for 100 thefts. Speaker also regained first place as a slugger, with 153 total bases, and leads in runs scored with 63. Eddie Collins heads the sacrifice hitters with 20 and Baker in home runs with eight. Detroit leads in team hitting with .256.

Jim Thorpe, Milwaukee, the famous Indian, is far in front among the base stealers with 30 to his credit. Bradley, Columbus, leads in sacrifice hits with 22; Gilbert, Kansas City, in home runs with eight; Demmitt, Columbus, in total bases with 124, and Gardner, Toledo, in runs scored with 51. HOME RUN KING INJURED.

New York, July 15.—Third baseman J. Franklin Baker, of the New York Yankees, will be out of the game for at least a week as the result of an injury Friday.

Baker crashed into a grandstand gate while going after a foul in the fourth inning of the second game with Detroit and was so badly shaken up he was forced to quit. After an examination the club's physician said that, while no bones were broken, Baker would not be able to play for a week.

The local club now has three stars—Maisel, Baker and Gilhooley—out of the game because of injuries. Catcher Nunamaker is out under an indefinite suspension.

HOW BIG CIRCUIT NAGS SPEND DAYS.

7:30 A. M.—Worked out. Is driven fast one day a week. Goes 15 miles—five times by stopwatch—rest of distance being used in practicing scoring. One day a week worked slowly 15 miles. Others just jogged five miles.

9 to 10 A. M—Returned to stable; given hot bath, rubbed with liniments and bandaged.

Noon—Has dinner; two quarts of well crushed oats. Has all the hay it wants all day and night. Afternoon, rests in stall.

6 P. M.—Supper—two quarts of oats and two quarts of bran mixed with water and salt into a "bran mash." This is the treat of the day. Has three-gallon pail of water during day.

7 P. M.—Grassed for twenty minutes on clover. Brought back to well strawed stall. Sleeps about five hours a night; sometimes during day. Many horses sleep standing up and lie down only a few minutes at night.

Will Peter Mac (2:03½) be the first two-minute trotter?

TRAINER MIKE M'DEVITT DRIVING PETER MAC IN PRACTICE WORKOUT.

But Peter Mac dislikes to, according to the railbirds who have watched his daily workouts. The speed marvel is not training just as desired and many believe he will not prove the same kind of race horse as he has a time performer.

McDevitt has been working his flier with hood and blinkers and devoting hours each morning to schooling the son of Peter the Great in the art of scoring. If Peter Mac overcomes this fault he'll be the most feared starter on the big line.

Handled by an amateur the Cleveland stepper made his mark of 2:03½ last season. With a professional pilot in the rig behind him Peter Mac is expected to prove two seconds faster. Recently he was clocked 2:06¼, and experts say, had he tried, McDevitt's trotter could have stepped in 2:05.

There is no doubt but that Peter Mac is touted higher than any other stake horse tha thas ever appeared. He has never started in a race and no trotter yet to take the plunge into money competition has accomplished the feats credited to the Cleveland racer.

If Peter Mac delivers, and Clevelanders say he will, Tommy Murphy is in for some tough sledding. For years Tommy has been the leading money winner. Last year he salted away $128,420, Peter Scott (2:05½) bringing in more than $50,000.

McDevitt says the other stake candidates are going to find the pickings rather thin on the Grand circuit this summer. If "Mac" falls down as a prophet his prestige as a driver will suffer a slump.

BLACKBIRDS EXPECT HARD BATTLE SUNDAY

The Huntington aggregation will clash with the Blackbirds Sunday at League park and a large attendance is desired by the management as the reduction of prices was made so all could see the games. The management is trying to give the people of Fort Wayne high-class semi-pro ball at the lowest possible price.

The new scale of prices which will start tomorrow and continue the balance of the season, giving men a covered bleacher seat for 15 cents and boys the same for 10 cents, is giving the fans a run for their money. For an additional 10 cents a grandstand seat may be obtained. Ladies will be taxed 10 cents at the gate but will be admitted free to the grandstand.

The Huntington aggregation is backed by W. F. Schacht, a prominent Lime city manufacturer, who will be with the team Sunday. The Blackbirds have played one game with Huntington this season, winning 4 to 0 in a fast game. Since then Huntington has added considerable weight to their lineup and are coming confident of a win. In the game played earlier in the season only one Fort Wayne player reached third base until the sixth inning, when hits by Chambers and Hillinger won the game for the Blackbirds. The game will start at 3 o'clock Sunday, with Frank Farnan doing the officiating.

IT'S VERY MUCH LIKE WORLD'S SERIES CLASH

Promptly at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon the Bowser and the Electric works teams were scheduled for the big clash at League park which is to break the long tie in the shop league race in Fort Wayne.

The winners of today's struggle will play either the Turners or Western Gas teams next Saturday. Both teams are in the best of shape and are confident that they will win.

Boosters of both teams have made preparations that resemble a world's series rooting crowd. Plenty of noise and good natured rivalry will be demonstrated.

WELSH TO ENGAGE IN 20 ROUND BOUT

Denver, Col., July 15.—Freddie Welsh, world's champion lightweight, definitely has accepted an offer of $17,500 for a twenty-round decision battle for the championship before the Colorado Springs Athletic club, known as the Hundred Million Dollar club, on Labor day. An opponent will be selected from this list: Charlie White, Benny Leonard, Ever Hammer, Johnny Dundee.

It was first reported Friday that Welsh had signed articles, and he would have signed them but for the fact he was compelled to catch a fast train for San Francisco to bid good-by to his sister, who sailed for the Malay peninsula.

Club Ready With Guarantee.

The articles will be signed upon the deposit of a guarantee, which will be accomplished upon Welsh's return. The club officials were prepared to put the money in the bank Friday, but all arrangements could not be made before Welsh left.

The purse offered by the club for the bout is $30,000. Today's proposition made to Welsh is far more liberal than previous demands of Welsh, who formerly had asked $13,500 with a privilege of the gate receipts.

Under the present arrangements the club takes all the chances. Any receipts above the amount guaranteed to the champion and to his opponent will go to the club.

White Probable Choice.

The right to choose the opponent rests with the club instead of with Welsh. This provision was inserted because of the fact that Welsh is scheduled to meet Charlie White, of Chicago, who normally would be the choice in a no-decision battle at Minneapolis July 21. While it is not anticipated that there will be any definite result from this bout, it is impossible to tell what will happen in a fight, and White may be eliminated.

"They say that I am afraid of White and I have dodged him time and again. As a matter of fact, I know that White is a good man, and I do not propose to meet him in a twenty-round battle until I am well paid for the fight. The Colorado Springs club is the first one which has definitely agreed to meet my demands without quibbling, and my first choice for the bout will be Charlie White.

Can Outbox White.

"I recognize White as both the most dangerous and the least dangerous man I would have to meet. He is dangerous because he possesses the knockout punch; not dangerous because he is not skilled as a boxer, and I could hold him off and run up a big margin of points on him.

"Next to White I would pick Dundee and Leonard as the only men who are really entitled to a go for the championship now. Joe Mandot is not going as well as he was, while Johnny Griffiths is too heavy.

"As far as the weight goes, while I am not prepared to talk definitely about that yet, I know that I can fight better where I have to make weight than where I go in at catch weights, as I have to get in my best shape in order to reduce."

MAY CAGE WILD FANS.

Brooklyn, July 15.—Wild fans infesting the 50 cent bleachers at the Brooklyn league park may be forced to view the daily pastime hereafter from behind screens. President Ebbets, incensed over the rowdy action of cash customers who recently attacked Umpire Byron, has threatened to take this action if the fans cut loose again.

CANCEL ELGIN RACES.

Elgin, Ill., July 15—A decision to abandon the 1916 Elgin road races was reached Friday at a meeting of the Chicago Automobile club and the Elgin Road Racing association. The first races were staged in 1910 for the Elgin National and the Chicago Automobile club trophies.

"We are still in the fight and have a great chance to win the pennant, but we realize that the Yankees and Red Sox must be beaten before we can get into the world series.

"I agree with my players in the opinion that the Cleveland club will become anchored because they lack the necessary pitching strength. Detroit is similarly handicapped, but the Yankees and Red Sox are wonderfully strong in the box. So are the White Sox for that matter, and as the race progresses it will be a battle of pitchers all the way to the finish.

"I'll admit that the White Sox have one weak spot in the infield, but we have so much strength in the other positions that we expect to remain factors for the rest of the campaign."

"I've been Ty Cobb's roommate for a long time and it gets my goat whenever I hear people making unjust criticism of his methods on the field. A fairer, cleaner or better ball player than Ty never lived.

"He's human, remember that, and that's why he is so well liked. When he has a great day with the stick he's happy and when a slump spreads over his hitting he bucks and rips and that's why he doesn't stay in a slump.

"This thing of licking all the rest of the league in batting every year is no pipe job. It's the hardest thing in the world."

ESSENTIALS FOR BEAUTY

FRESH air is as necessary to the health of the hair as it is to the health of the lungs. The woman who is not guided by this truth has hair which, as a rule, is "matted down" and of an unattractive shade. The outdoor girl, whose hair is blown about by the wind and kissed by the sun, is full of life and vigor, and its coloring is fine.

Fresh air and plenty of brushing with the shampoo and gentle massaging of the scalp will often make "sickly" hair healthy.

Brush the hair for five minutes every night and massage the scalp briefly with the tips of the fingers. Then let the hair hang down unplaited until ready to get into bed.

In the morning, while preparing to dress, again let the hair fall loosely. On balmy days stand at an open window so that the breeze may blow the hair about and the sunshine warm it. In cold weather stand in the sunshine for a short sun bath.

When motoring or playing golf you should dress the hair loosely that it may have the benefit of the airing. At the seashore let it hang loosely in the sun for a few minutes each day. This treatment naturally bleaches the hair slightly, but after a few weeks in town it goes back to its true shade; and the wholesome effect upon it of the sun more than compensates for the temporary bleach. For a blond this treatment is especially effective; it maintains the fairness of the hair as nothing else will.

Among my acquaintances is a young woman whose hair is full of golden tints. I asked her how she managed this. She explained that each summer she spends from eight to ten weeks at the seashore, and while there never wears a hat.

"By the end of the summer my hair is very dry, but it is well aired and sunned and bleached," she added. "It is a simple matter to restore its oils. Plenty of massage and shampoo, and some brilliantine rubbed on the ends of the hair to keep it from breaking—this will do all that is required."

ODDS & ENDS

USE lime water for thread worms. When solutions of common salt are found to be irritating and another remedy is wanted one may have recourse to lime water. It is to be used in the same way as the salt solution.

BEFORE mending stockings with ordinary darning yarn it is a good plan to hold the skein or card over the spout of a kettle of boiling water. By this means the steam effectually shrinks the wool and when the stocking is sent to the wash there will be no fear of the mended portion shrinking away or tearing the surrounding part.

HOT baths will break up colds if one is willing to go through the discomfort attendant upon such treatment. For this process one gets into a tub in which the water is at a comfortable temperature, but from then until getting out more water of a higher temperature is constantly added. When leaving the water one goes immediately to bed, piling the surface with blankets and lying between two. To drink a glass of hot lemonade increases the tendency to open the pores and by the next day the cold should be gone. One must always go to bed after a hot bath, for the body is then most susceptible to cold.

USEFUL and pretty pincushions are made in the shape of an apple and covered with a silk tinted to represent the red and green of the familiar fruit. They are round and rather flat, giving a wide area to hold the pins, and they are stuffed with raw wool, which affords little resistance and does not pack so tightly as cotton. The strong threads sewn through the center of the cushion makes the depression on each side to represent the core, and all the finishing gathers of the silk are hidden under the green stem.

ACAUSE of much suffering is the height of imbecility expressed in the idea that shoes or slippers shorter or narrower than one ought to wear will make the foot look shorter. Nothing could be more obviously foolish, for short shoes are the short road to bunions and tight shoes are the sure road to corns, besides which a foot "spreading" over the edges of a shoe too small for it (as it will invariably do) is one of the most hideous things imaginable.

WHEN you are making clothes for the children, which you know will need letting down within a month or two, try putting a tuck on the wrong side of the hem. When this is ripped there will be hardly a trace of the makeshift and there will be no time wasted in ripping the hem, rehanging the garment and restitching the hem. Another good way to prepare for future lengthening of a dress is to make a rather wide hem, leaving it unstitched, and folding it up so that a second hem is formed. This is stitched, and when the dress becomes short is let out and the first hem stitched. This is a time-saving method of shortening a night dress or apron where very careful work would not be needed. An even length is kept without ripping or cutting.

Melt two tablespoons of butter and two tablespoons of flour and add gradually a cup of scalded milk. Melt two squares of chocolate in a double boiler, add one-half cup of sugar and two tablespoons of hot water. Stir until smooth. Combine the two, add the well-beaten yolks of three eggs; allow the mixture to cool and then fold in the whites of three eggs beaten stiff. Add one teaspoon of vanilla. Turn the mixture into a buttered baking dish and bake in a moderate oven for twenty-five minutes.

Cream Tomato Soup.

One quart can of tomatoes. Strain through a colander, getting every bit but the seeds. Add an equal quantity hot water, a pinch soda, and a grated onion. Let boil and skim, then add slowly one tablespoonful cornstarch dissolved in half a cup of sweet cream; season with salt to taste and as much cayenne pepper as you can get on point of knife. Serve hot with slice cut from bread and toasted in the oven. This is very nice if rightly made.

Apple Canapes.

Cut bread in one-eighth-inch slices, shape with a round cutter and saute in butter until delicately browned. Pare and cut apples in halves; then remove cores, thus making cavities. Saute apples in butter, cavity side down, in a covered pan. When apples are half done, turn, fill cavities with sugar and continue the cooking until apples are soft. Place on prepared bread and serve with cream sabayon sauce.

To make Sauce—Beat the yolks of two eggs and one tablespoon sugar until light. Heat a half cup cream to boiling point and pour slowly, while beating constantly, on egg yolk. Add one teaspoon of apricot brandy and cook, stirring constantly, three minutes. Strain.

Clam Chowder.

Wash fifty clams thoroughly and put them in a pot with half a pint of water; when the shells are open they are done. Take them from the shells and chop fine, saving all the clam water for the chowder. Fry out a large bowl of salt pork, cut up fine, and when the scraps are a good brown take them out and put in a large bowl of chopped onions to fry. They should be fried in a frying pan and the chowder kettle be made clean before they are put in it. (The chief secret in chowder making is to try the onions so delicately that they will be missing in the chowder.) Add a quart of hot water to the onions, put in the clams, clam water, and pork scraps. After it boils add a large bowl of potatoes cut into eighths of original size and half a can of tomatoes, and when they are cooked the chowder is finished. Before it is taken up thicken with a cup of cracker crumbs and add a quart of milk. No seasoning is needed but good black pepper.

Maple Carmel Nut Cake.

Take half a cup of butter, one and a half cups sugar, one cup of lukewarm water, three cups of pastry flour, one cup of chopped English walnuts, whites of four eggs, two rounding teaspoons of baking powder. Beat the butter to a cream and gradually add the sugar, beating well. To this slowly pour in the water, then sift in the flour, a little at a time, beating well, reserving half a cup of flour to mix with the nuts, which now mix into the butter. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth and add the last thing with the baking powder. Grease well a long, shallow pan or line with greased paper, pour in the batter and bake in a moderate oven for 30 minutes or until done. Much depends on the depth and size of the pan. Cover with maple caramel and English walnuts. When ready to serve, cut into squares, a nut in the center of each square.

Beefsteak Chowder.

Cut a generous pound of round steak into strips an inch and a half long and half an inch thick and wide. Cut a two-inch cube of fat salt pork into tiny bits, and cook in a hot frying pan, with an onion sliced very thin. When the fat is fried out of the pork and the onion is browned, add a quart of boiling water. Let simmer five minutes, then pour the whole over the piece of steak. Bring the contents of a saucepan quickly to the boiling point. Let boil five minutes, then simmer until the meat is tender. Have ready four or five potatoes, pared, cut in slices, scalded in boiling water, drained and rinsed in cold water. Add the potatoes with salt and pepper to the meat. Add also, if needed, boiling water to cover the potatoes. Cook until the potatoes are tender. Then add a cup and a half of thin cream or rich milk and additional seasoning if needed. Split half a dozen crackers, and arrange them in the soup tureen. Pour over them the chowder and serve at once.

FIND HEALTH IN DIVERSION

BY MRS. McCUNE.

IN these days when women are taking up so enthusiastically the life of real usefulness, it is necessary that they look closely to the things which make for good health and sound mentality.

No woman can afford to allow herself to get into a routine, for herein lies danger both to the mental and physical life.

The woman who has her living to make, the housewife with multifarious calls upon her energy, or the woman who, though financially independent, still chooses an active place in the hive of the world's workers, must make the best of her hours of rest and recreation; they should be used in their highest sense to recreate.

No matter how delightfully engrossing and interesting one's work may be, nor how close to one's heart the duties chosen or given us may be, it is necessary to side-step into paths new and strange in order to bring about a real sense of mental and physical refreshment, a refreshment that will not only rest and invigorate, but will stimulate to fuller activity.

Perhaps to the really busy woman, the week-end trip cannot be over-estimated. In hundreds of cases this can be taken with little or no expense and any effort required is more than compensated for by the return in improved health and vigor.

Where the hostess does her own work or employs but one maid, a real pleasure should be found in assisting with the duties which the routine work of a home, even on Sundays, calls forth.

A hostess will more heartily enjoy her guest and feel that she is really entering into the spirit of her home life, if a pleasant interest is shown in the duties and attention that the care of the home requires.

Probably the chief value of the week-end trip is to get away from one's customary environment, to secure a change of mental contact and to find the refreshment and rest which can come from a complete transfer of interest.

Aside from the week-end visit there are other paths open for diversion. Even the day trip to some neighboring park with daintily packed luncheon to lessen the expense is not to be despised.

What could be more refreshing to the tired housewife who has daily a hundred and one calls upon her time, than to start out after an early breakfast, with a box luncheon, and to feel that for a whole day she can rest under wide spreading trees, where eyes and brain are relieved by the absence of city sights and noises, and where the soft green brings a sense of peace?

It is a pity that the average housewife does not realize the physical and mental strength to be derived from a trip of this kind, and where there are children it is invaluable.

The average child is not only happy, but good, when allowed to roam at will in broad fields where flowers may be freely plucked and where they can play unhampered.

Some women contend that the trouble of preparing for a trip of this kind robs it of much of its pleasures. If this is the case, is it not because there is an exaggerated idea of the needs of the trip?

A simple lunch, sandwiches, fruit and cake, which can be eaten from a box, with perhaps a cup of hot coffee, tea or cocoa from a thermos bottle is all that is needed, and what could be more nourishing, simpler or easier of preparation than this?

The writer knows from personal experience, having packed many lunches of this sort for a day's outing (including both lunch and supper), that it does not take much time, thought or worry. The difficulties of preparing for a trip of this kind are really almost infinitesimal when one considers the splendid return to be reaped in health and renewed spirits.

For the one who does not care for pastoral life, desiring more to be "on the move," finding in this form of recreation greater rest, there are innumerable trolley trips, river rides or walking trips, such bringing its quota of beneficial pleasure.

The chief thing to keep in mind is to make this week-end recreation one that will bring us the greatest return physically, and to bring us a real change from the duties that call us through the week.

Close-fitting hats and extra puffs and braids cause the hair to perspire and do not allow the air to circulate through it to the roots. Lack of air is responsible for so much poor hair among city women. There is no hair tonic that equals nature's.

MANY women exhaust their system by not taking daily care of their health. Those who are troubled to know how to proceed should take a tablespoonful of olive oil daily. It is good for the skin, the digestion and the liver, making them do their work well. Fill a wineglass partly with water, then put in the oil and more water, gulp it down and you will not taste it. Get the best olive oil that is to be got. This is a treatment that may not suit everybody—it does suit most people; but ask your doctor, because he may know of some bodily peculiarity that might make it disagree. There is no treatment that will suit everybody, but in nine cases out of ten those who follow this advice will testify to its wisdom and will be quite astonished as the result. It makes you vigorous, brisk and not overburdened.

THE housewife must remember that the appetite needs to be tempted in warm weather and that, in the interest of health, a meal must be carefully balanced.

Pork, beans, potatoes, rice, creamed cabbage, heavy puddings, etc., are not well adapted to hot weather diet. The requisite amount of starch, sugar and fat can be introduced in a more tempting and digestible form. For example, if the day is very warm and your dinner contains meat that is rich in protein and vegetables and a cold soup that are high in water, supply the fat in a salad oil—a salad with a mayonnaise dressing is tempting even in hot weather—and the starch in some vegetable such as peas or green beans. This will give you a balanced ration that will not appear heavy and will be palatable even in the hottest weather.

Then—

Fancy a chap with clean-cut, handsome features—one whose shoulders are broad and who walks with the virile step of youth. Imagine him to be brilliant and cultured—then son of distinguished parents. Conceive him as chivalrous and courteous—symbolical of he whom we are proud to style the real American man.

Now—

Weave about these characters a romance as emotional as that of Romeo and Juliet, as soul-stirring as that of Pagliacci; add thereto the composite elements of fiery passion, sacrifice and devotion, and into your idyl of love inject antithetical comedy and tragedy.

Compare your phantasy with the story that follows—one that delineates one of the most remarkable "heart affairs" of the present generation. Eclipsing the vagaries of those sentimentally inclined, it proves beyond doubt that truth is stranger than fiction.

CALLED TO CAREER OF MERCY.

Four years ago Jane Taylor Clark—she of the peaches and cream complexion—arrived in Chicago to study medicine. She had just graduated from a New Jersey finishing school for girls, and though her family, well known in Newark social circles, wished her to remain at home, Miss Clark felt the call of a career.

"I do not care to be a ballroom butterfly," she said. "I have a pleasing voice, a talent for dramatic art and a desire to assist in alleviating the sufferings of humanity. This latter appeals most strongly to me. I shall be a doctor."

She engaged a room in a medical students' boarding-house, bought some text-books and began to delve into the mysteries of anatomy.

In the same boarding-house lived Walter Raleigh Johnson, a senior interne at a near-by hospital. Like Miss Clark, he came of a family wealthy and socially prominent—a family whose name had long been associated with the thriving city of North Yakima, Wash. And, too, like Miss Clark, he had pledged his life to curing the ills of afflicted mankind.

The day after the girl's arrival in Chicago she met Walter Raleigh Johnson, and because he was chivalrous and courteous (heir, as it were, to the virtues of his illustrious namesake) she fell in love with him before she had learned the difference between the tarsal and metatarsal bones. And from developments that followed it appears the "case" was mutual.

WHEN LOVE KNOCKED AT THE DOOR.

"Appendicitis," said the doctor. "Bad case—very bad. We must operate at once."

Miss Clark overheard.

"Then take me to Raleigh's hospital," she said. "I want him to be near."

They did take her to "Raleigh's" hospital and he rode in the ambulance with her. As they wheeled the patient into the operating-room the interne leaned over and pressed a kiss upon her lips.

"Good! Her condition is extremely critical—you realize that. Science has done all that it can for her. You must do the rest. If she recovers it will be in answer to the call of love. There's a hard fight ahead of you, my boy, so pitch in—and win!"

For three weeks the fires of life burned low. At the bedside of the girl labored the young doctor, administering to her every need, strengthening her, sustaining her by the mysterious power of love. And in the days that followed a coral pink crept into the pale cheeks and the eyes of the patient shone with a new light—slowly she came from the Valley of Death.

And then one evening the trained nurse left the room. Raleigh and Jane were alone. Kneeling down beside the bed and taking her frail hands into his, the doctor whispered a question as old as the first courtship.

"Yes," was the reply.

At the request of Miss Clark her mother, Mrs. Jane A. Clark, was not told about the critical illness until her daughter was well on the way to recovery. Walter Raleigh Johnson met Mrs. Clark at the depot when she came from Newark.

"I am in love with your daughter," he said. "She is in love with me. I am not going to ask you for Jane—she is mine, anyway. Did I not snatch her from the clutches of death—save her for myself?"

LOVERS LAUGH AT MOTHER.

True, no doubt, and Mrs. Clark was thankful to the heroic young doctor. "But—well, not just yet," she replied. "Later on, perhaps, you can marry Jane. You have not known each other very long, and—"

"Love laughs at locksmiths," 'tis said. And at mothers as well. When the girl was able to be about she and her betrothed hied themselves away to a minister and were married. Never a word did they say to "Mamma" Clark. The bride did not want to make her unhappy and the bridegroom did not want to make the bride unhappy.

"Did you ever have any other sweetheart?" the girl-wife asked the doctor one day.

"I was just wondering, that's all,' said she.

Had the doctor been a bit more curious at his bride's question he might have learned that the previous day a pretty woman approached her on the street with anger in her eyes.

"If you do—well, I'll kill you!" cried the woman.

Evidently she did not know of the couple's secret marriage. On the night of graduation Mrs. Johnson saw this girl in the hall—but she made no attempt to carry out the threat.

In August, 1912, the husband, now a graduate physician and surgeon, decided to practice in Johnstown, Pa., and made arrangements to move there. Thinking it unwise for the happiness of all concerned further to delay telling of her marriage, and still wishing to be near her husband, the young wife wired her folks that she was going to Newark for a vacation. Arriving there, she found Mrs. Clark had changed her mind about deferring the marriage until "a little later on."

"You can be married next month," she said. "It will be a pretty church wedding. Let's begin to plan now. Dr. Johnson is a nice young man and I shall be pleased to have him for a son-in-law."

The already-muchly-married girl was in a quandary. So was young Dr. Johnson when he received a letter apprising him of the surprising turn in events. They hesitated to confess having deceived the wife's relatives, and yet it never occurred to them that they could be remarried and still keep the previous wedding a secret.

In the meantime the bride's mother had sent out the announcements and girl friends had given her several showers. And to make matters worse, the old family physician, once an Episcopal clergyman, requested permission to "brush up" on the wedding ritual and perform the ceremony.

But—

It was not until sisters-in-law of Mrs. Johnson engaged in a spirited argument over whose little daughter was to be flower girl that Mrs. Johnson broke down and cried—and 'fessed!

AMAZED AT DISCLOSURE.

Of course it was an embarrassing situation. The announcements had to be recalled and explanation made to girl friends who had given the showers. The doctor's wife apologized to the family physician in person.

"Don't you worry, Jane," he said. "I'm not too old to appreciate a joke."

And that's the way every one looked at it. Dr. Johnson hastened to Newark to meet the family and friends of his wife, and soon afterward took her back with him to Johnstown.

The doctor's gold-lettered "shingle" didn't seem to bring much business, so he and his wife moved West to Tacoma, where they lived from January in 1913 to February in 1914. Then Dr. Johnson was offered a position as assistant pathologist at the Kankakee Insane Asylum at Kankakee, Ill. He accepted.

Walter Raleigh Johnson, physician and surgeon, who saved the life of a pretty girl "medic" and then married her. It was a beautiful romance, but, oh, what a sad ending!

"But I must go there alone," he told Mrs. Johnson. "Only single men can qualify for the position, because no quarters are provided at the institution for families. I told them I had been married, but was separated from my wife."

LETTERS BREATHED OF LOVE.

So it was agreed that while Dr. Johnson was earning a reputation at Kankakee his wife should take vocal instruction at the Valparaiso (Ind.) University. They would not be far removed and once a week could manage to meet each other.

"I think I'll get a cello and practice on it, so that I can play with my darling when she gets through. No, don't think of any other instrument, because I'm 'Jack of all' myself, and our children, sweetheart, can get all they want of brass music from their dad. Only I thought it would be sweet if their mamma could play and sing sweet lullabys with them and for them. It would be a better influence and sweeter than anything else that my darling could do."

But the couple was never destined to have the children referred to so sentimentally by the doctor, for—well, let Mrs. Johnson tell you why in her own words:

"He came to visit me at Valparaiso on Aug. 17—his birthday—and we were, oh, so happy. Little did I know that it was to be our last meeting. When he returned to Kankakee wrote me the loveliest letters and promised to see me again on Sept. 15.

"I waited at the depot for hours that night expecting him to come. When the last train had pulled out I received a message. It stated that Raleigh had left Kankakee suddenly and gone to Tennessee. I never heard from him again.

"I could not reason why he should treat me the way he did. We had never had a cross word—he seemed to love me so. And then suddenly I remembered the threat the woman made shortly before Raleigh's graduation. And, too, I recalled a postal card she had once written to my husband and which in a careless moment he had left lying where it came into my possession. Naturally, I could only believe one thing—that he had gone away with her.

"I became a nervous wreck and had to seek seclusion in a sanitarium. Thinking that my husband eventually would go to the home of his parents in North Yakima or that they would know his address, I wrote many letters, begging him to come back to me. But I received no answer. The letters I sent by ordinary mail never were returned, but those I sent registered were. I have one here. You may read it and judge for yourself how much I loved him—how willing I was to forgive him—how I longed to have him come back to me."

The letter follows:

"My Dear Hubby: Darling Raleigh, how is my boy—and where is he? It almost kills me to think of it, but it is six long months today since I waited in the station at Valpo for my darling hubby. Raleigh, what is it all about that you can't even write just a little sweet letter to help me in the long, lonely wait? But never mind, sweetheart, just remember that I love you, and can and will always wait until you can come and tell me all.

"Just remember that no one loves you, or has even been as honest and straightforward with you, as your wife Jane. Darling Raleigh, today is my birthday, and, oh, how heavy is my heart. When I say my prayers I ask God to give us health and strength to guide us right, so that you and I will soon be close in each other's arms. Oh, Raleigh, then I want to die—with your arms around me. If you just say 'Come' I can and will. You know nothing can keep me from you but death. God has spared my life again and I know it was for you—because I wanted to die."

DETECTIVES MAKE DISCOVERY.

"I put detectives on his trail," continued Mrs. Johnson, "and they learned that he was in North Yakima. He told the authorities out there that I could take no action against him, as he had procured a divorce on the grounds of cruelty!"

Sc Calahan & Callahan, her Chicago attorneys, have set about to have the decree annulled on the grounds that Mrs. Johnson was never served with a notice of the suit.

An Austrian scientist has discovered a way to make an enemy's guns betray their location, tell their number and register their caliber, and to do these things despite many intervening miles. Wonderful as this seems offhand, simple principles are involved and a mechanism long known is merely modified to fit it to new uses.

The seismograph has been employed for years to register the earth's tremblings due to a readjustment of the massive crust which forms its surface. Of late the seismograph has been made still more acute and earthquakes originating hundreds and even thousands of miles away have been felt by the apparatus and duly recorded in wavering lines upon the paper enveloping a revolving cylinder. In this way the relative intensity, the duration and the approximate remoteness of the disturbances have been automatically detected and registered.

But earthquakes are not the only things that make the ground vibrate, and the tremors are all of them apparently characteristic of their promoting cause. At least that is what Professor Belar has long believed, and recently he has perfected an apparatus for military service that proves him to have been right.

Early in 1907 this Austrian scientist worked out a plan by which the seismograph was to be used as an artillery detector, and the idea of thus finding out something about the foe appealed very strongly to the Austrian ministry of war. The matter was referred to the inspector general of artillery and some time later tests were undertaken at Gurkfeld. There Professor Belar actually obtained by his special apparatus a record of the vibrations propagated through the ground by the firing of heavy guns, and a means of getting a check on distances was secured by taking records at various ranges and with different kinds of weapons, thus acquiring visual standards by which to judge of the remoteness and of the caliber of the far-off guns.

Since then Professor Belar has been patiently developing his instrument, and now he has an outfit that can be carried about in a handbag. Those who have seen the apparatus in service declare that one familiar with the meaning of the records can tell at once what has occasioned the inciting vibration.

A street car makes its own peculiar autographic records, while a rumbling wagon or a field piece traversing a road or street leaves its identifying trace upon the sheet, and the jar due to firing a gun is found to be quite distinct from the tremors set up by the blow of an exploding shell upon the ground. This reverses the telltale performance, because it indicates how an Austrian projectile behaves and whether or not it has found its mark far off in the hidden distance.

Of course, the story is plain only to one familiar with the characteristic signatures of the different sorts of earth wave producers. But Professor Belar has produced a table of signs, and the ordnance officer is expected to know these.

In actual service the observer at the seismograph must be able to separate the earth shocks due to his own guns from those created by the enemy's batteries. This difficulty is got over by putting the seismograph man in touch with his own artillery by means of telephone or wireless so that he knows when the guns are to be fired.

For years back, and even now, Professor Belar has been in charge of the Laibach Observatory, where his work has been well nigh exclusively in connection with seismological problems. Laibach is something short of fifty miles from a part of the Austro-Italian battle front. There some of the greatest artillery duels of the world war have been fought and the big Italian siege guns have made the earth tremble so that the vibrations were picked up at far-away Laibach.

It happens, however, that the observatory at Laibach has been too remote to identify the character of the attacking ordnance, but at closer range, say within twenty-five miles of the firing line, niceties of detection are possible. It was for this reason that the Austrian scientist labored to produce an efficient and yet a compact instrument that would be relatively so light that it could be easily and speedily transported by hand from point to point.

Stolid Obedience of Giant Russian Peasant Changes Under Clean Life in the War; He Begins to Use His Mind, and the Awakening Is a New Menace to the Autocrats.

VERY little of the Russian peasant's part in the war leaks into the newspapers, either through the medium of the cable or in stories sent by those correspondents who were fortunate enough to get passports taking them along the battle lines and among the concentration camps of the czar's army. Mostly the peasant is expressed in terms of soldiers—generally in terms of killed and wounded. His is the part of working and fighting, not that of the glorious hero. The latter is pre-empted by the officers; the peasant, sometimes a semisavage and slow-thinking soldier, seldom, if ever becomes an individuality in this army.

He is a wonderful soldier, too. Notwithstanding the fact that he undoubtedly is slow-thinking and slow-acting, the Russian peasant has been whipped into one of the finest, stanchest, bravest soldiers of the European battlefields. It took hard work and a great deal of disciplining to accomplish this, for many of the men had to be taught the rudiments of decent living.

It was not long, however, before their brains reacted to the stimulus of the good, clean, active life, and they began to understand things and even to think and plan for themselves, and soon the good soldier appeared from the stupid peasant chrysalis—not a butterfly, like his officers, but an intelligent, thinking, reasoning, human being, possessing unusual strength and powers of endurance and an almost passive obedience to constituted authority. The educating and improving of the typical poor-class Russian always will be pointed out as one of the wonder accomplishments of the war.

Credit must be given to the men who accomplished this, but, also, much blame, for they failed to realize the completion of their tasks and have brought about conditions in the ranks of the army that are far from being ideal from any standpoint. The officer, accustomed all his life to lording it over the civilian in almost any country, has a certain contempt for the nonmilitary man. This was particularly true in Russia before the war.

The methods that were necessary to whip the man into shape added much to this contempt, and it soon became the custom for the officer to regard the man as simply a tool, like his sword or automatic—something to be taken care of because it might prove useful in emergencies, but which could be badly ill-treated and neglected without its making any protest.

The officers, secure in the belief that the peasant was merely an animal, treated him as one physically. He was kicked about at will, struck with the flat of swords, or even with the edge if the officer's temper led him to administer heavy punishment. He was beaten with rope ends; often after a long day's march he would have to labor all night at trench work, dinnerless, supperless, worn out with fatigue, lacking even drinking water, while the officer stood over him and cursed and beat him.

When there was but little to eat, all that went to the officer; the soldier could eat if he had anything, but if he didn't, that was no concern of his superior. From some of the regiments and army corps in the field tales of horrible punishments inflicted for light infractions of regulations or failure to accomplish an assigned task, or even for some imaginary fault, have sifted back with the returning wounded—those who are spoken of only in terms of thousands, whose individual entity has been swallowed up in the larger numbers of their brethren.

One is the story of Pieter Vassilov. Pieter was a giant, one of those huge men who tower above their surroundings, unconscious of their own great strength until some unusual event or emergency brings it into play in such a manner that it is brought home to them that they are unusual men. Blond he was, with a great shock of tousled hair, with blue-gray eyes, yet they were not the conqueror's eyes, for they were cloudy and shallow and lacked the "gaze of eagles." More than 6½ feet tall, with broad shoulders, his arm was like steel, his legs tireless.

For a while at the front things were bad. But when the authorities awoke to a realization of the fact that they couldn't have an efficient army unless care were taken of it and proper things provided at the time they were needed, matters began to improve, the standard of living became good, there were clothing and rations and munitions and officers forced the men to live according to the ordinary principles of decency and sanitary cleanliness, in so far as the latter could be carried out in the camps and trenches.

This was a new life for Pieter, just as it was a new life for the thousands of other peasants, his comrades, who accompanied him to the front. For a short time he rebelled at the new regulations; but soon he became accustomed to them, grew to like them. This was the beginning of a new life, the dawning of a new reason for Pieter, as it was for many others of the Russians.

This the officers of his command failed to appreciate. In fact, very few of the Russian officers did appreciate this change, that was taking place in many men throughout the army, and even to this day there are but few who will admit that the peasant soldier is anything but an animal or a fighting machine, that acts only at command and does no thinking for himself.

Now, it is one of the strange features of this war that, whereas a whole, live, soldier's life is counted as naught when considered in terms of attack or defense, the life of a wounded soldier is held as of great value, and unusual preparations have been made for the treating and care of the wounded. Being wounded, but still alive, Pieter had gained an added value in the eyes of his officers; so he was at once rushed to the field hospital, where emergency treatment was given him and then he was placed in a car, along with a lot of other wounded men, and rushed to a base hospital.

In the base hospital he received unusually kind treatment. Surgeons, nurses, Sisters of Mercy, all looked after the wounded, and he tasted then for the first time many dishes that were new to his palate. Under such treatment he could do nothing else but get well.

His recovery, however, was not rapid, nor was his life free from pain. It was many days before he could breathe properly, and many more before he could turn himself in bed without assistance. These days, usually long for the convalescent, were not so for him, however, for he employed his time in exercising to its utmost his new thinking faculty.

When he rejoined his command, Pieter found that it had moved from the trench lines occupied some months before and had advanced miles further, driving back the enemy in the grand sweep that was to end in the capture of strong Austrian fortresses.

He found conditions much the same, as regarded the daily routine, the mistreatment by the officers, the constant engagements with the enemy. He took part in several more mad rushes across the "No Man's Land," escaping always without injury and bearing his part well in the dangers of battle.

At last came a time when the force had penetrated so far into the enemy's country that the matter of obtaining supplies became difficult. Trains could not get through; rations were short, clothing had to last longer than formerly. Worst of all, there was an alarming shortage in the supply of powder and lead that interfered seriously with the operations of the army.

But Pieter, in his hours off duty when he was able to overcome the physical need of sleep and rest, noted in his wanderings towards that indefinite country known as "the Rear," that the Red Cross cars continued to arrive and depart with their former regularity, coming in daily empty and clean from the disinfecting they received at the base, to go back the same day, loaded with seriously wounded who could not recover in the little field hospitals. Pondering, he praised that custom of nations which respected the sign of mercy and permitted the injured man at least a small chance for recovery under right treatment.

Pieter was discussing this one evening with two or three of his comrades—men like himself who had learned to think and plan since the army life gave them an insight into the fact that they could do these things for themselves. Pieter was relating his experiences at the base hospital; telling how things were managed and why there was a shortage in the supply at the time. And his companions now and then interjected a remark or asked a question until the whole matter became clear to all of them.

"The generals should devise some way to get the food to the front," said one. "They are smart men and should be able to overcome such difficulties as the shell fire of the enemy places against them."

"But how can they?" another asked. This was the general question, "How can they?" It was the question those very generals themselves had been asking for several weeks "How can it be done?"

"Well," said Pieter, who long had been pondering this question, "they might load up these Red Cross cars that are coming to the trenches every day. If empty cars will come through because they have the Red Cross on them, there seems to me to be no reason why full ones wouldn't get here, too. They could mark the stuff medical supplies and put it in the Red Cross cars to fool the enemy and then we wouldn't have to be wearing ragged clothes and doing without our breakfast."

"Say that again, you." The voice was rough and commanding, but there was a certain note of surprised interest in it. Pieter, with the rest, jumped to his feet, his hand coming automatically to his cap in formal salute, for it was an officer who spoke.

For a moment Pieter was afraid that he had presumed to say something that might be forbidden. But, as the command was given again he repeated what he had just suggested to his comrades as a solution of the great difficulty facing the army. As he continued, the officer commanded Pieter to follow him.

Pieter advanced in the officer's footsteps, quaking inwardly. As they approached headquarters of his regiment, he began to feel that the punishment to be meted out to him might be very serious—death, in fact. Only one thing cheered him a little. His companions had not been arrested. So he followed the officer into headquarters and, after a little waiting, into the presence of the colonel and his staff.

The colonel heard it in silence, though there were expressions of surprise from the staff officers curiously idling about. He waved the soldier away, without a word: and Pieter, glad to escape from what appeared to him a perilous situation, hastily returned to his own quarters where he shut himself up after telling his comrades of the scene he had just played a part in.

Col. Valdimir Dubrowski said nothing about the incident at the time. But, the next day, when the entire staff was assembled he announced to them that he, personally, had discovered a sure and safe way of getting plentiful supplies of all munitions to the front and appointed one of them to carry a special dispatch to the general quartermaster's department with all speed. Pieter's plan was making headway.

Shortly afterwards, supplies, not only of food but ammunition as well, began coming to the camp in plenty. Red Cross cars carried them from the base. Col. Valdimir Dubrowski was mentioned in official statements as having rendered valuable service to the army and nation.

Pieter and his comrades were glad to get the plentiful food and new clothing. They said as much to one another, and all who had learned of Pieter's suggestion praised the giant generously. In camp, in the trenches, on duty and off, Pieter was a hero.

Three months later saw the command still at the same spot, still holding the lines against desperate attacks of the flower of the Teutonic armies, still receiving supplies in plenty. One day, a group of recruits stepped from a train at the rear; among them was a blond giant with clear blue-gray eyes, a proud bearing as one who is sure of his own ability; a man of wonderful physique, of dominant mentality.

He glanced around him with quick-seeing eyes. To the left, where the quartermaster's supplies were housed, on the precipice overlooking a river, a string of Red Cross cars were being inspected by an officer in the brilliant, glittering dress uniform of a general. That was a familiar figure to the giant so, being at liberty, he strolled towards the cars through whose open door he could perceive piles of boxes that he knew contained rifle cartridges.

A look of rage and hatred passed across the face of the giant as he approached closer to the official group. With a tigerish spring he landed beside the inspecting officer; and Pieter Vassilov seized Gen. Vladimir Dubrowski about the middle and, with the strength of a Porthos, hurled him over the precipice.

Just when hands stretched forth to seize him as he fled, a terrific explosion shook the earth and rent the string of box cars to shreds. An aeroplane, floating about overhead, had dropped a bomb. The Germans had discovered the Russian trick of misusing the Red Cross.

NINTH INSTALLMENT

Lieut. Jarvis Hope is detailed by the United States naval board to investigate and report his findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke, which serves to bring the submarine to a state of perfection. The lieutenant arrives in Valdavia and is welcomed by the inventor and his daughter, Cleo. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat, a Japanese helper is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism of the ventilating device. Hope reports favorably on the new device but there are others interested in it. An attempt to burglarize Doctor Burke's laboratory fails, but later Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom. Cleo sells her father's books to get money; later she finds a note from which she learns that they contain the secret formula. With Hope she races to the auctioneer's store only to find it in flames. Olga Ivanoff and Gerald Morton, two spies in search of the formula, attempt to capture Cleo when she calls at the house of Stephanski, the anarchist. Hope rushes to her aid; Morton shoots at him but the bullet hits a bomb, in the cellar, which explodes. Stephanski dies in the wreck of his house; the others escape. Hope and Cleo attend a ball at Mrs. Delmar's, whose nephew has two of the missing books. Mahlin, a spy, attempts to steal the books, but is discovered by Hope; in the excitement that follows the books disappear. Mahlin escapes. Hope and Cleo take a boat for an island out in the bay. The conspirators follow in other boats. Mahlin and the Jap turn out the island light. Morton's boat with the countess strikes a stray mine in the bay. After a violent storm Hope and Cleo arrive on a strange island and discover that the man they hunt is there. But Mahlin and the Japanese also reach the island and put up a fight for the books. They escape from Hope but return and dynamite the shack. The conspirators fail to harm Hope and Cleo. They manage to reach Sandsboro, where Doctor Owen has one of the books. Each of the others approach the doctor, but he refuses to hear them. He arranges to meet Hope at the hotel with the book. Morton poses as Hope and but for an earthquake would have possessed the volume.

Though the earthquake caused considerable material damage to Sandsboro, partially wrecking the hotel, a bank, and several smaller buildings, but few casualties and no fatalities resulted. Within an hour Hope, Cleo, and Doctor Owen, their clothing still showing traces of dust and falling plaster, were seated about a table in the latter's study, poring over the book which Cleo had snatched from Olga during the panic in the restaurant.

"There's nothing in this one, either," said Hope disgustedly, as he turned the last leaf and slammed the cover. "That leaves six more books to look for. Things are narrowing down, in any event."

"Where do we go now, Jarvis?" asked Cleo.

"It's at the southern end of the San Joaquin valley, Miss Burke," said the physician. "Right in the edge of the mountains. It's only a small place. You shouldn't have difficulty in finding your man there."

When Hope and Cleo descended from the branch-line-local at Santa Eulalia late the following afternoon they found that they were, as Owen had said, in the edge of the mountains. Santa Eulalia is one of those rural communities where everyone is, or professes to be, familiar with the details of everyone else's business. In such towns there are three recognized fountain-heads of information: The hotel, the general store, and the barber shop, and, as the proprietor of the general store was also postmaster, it was to him that Hope, having settled Cleo in the only hotel that the town boasted, addressed his inquiries.

"Do I know Dick Patten?" repeated the storekeeper in response to Hope's question. "Well, I reckon I do. I've sold a heap of goods to Dick. He's outfitted with me for's much as fifteen years."

"Well," said the merchant reflectively, "I reckon you might call Dick a prospector and not be far wrong. At any rate, that's what he's been doing as long's I've known him. Never made a strike that I heard tell of, but he always has money to pay his bills. A queer fellow, Dick is. Quiet sort, fond of books, never talks about himself, seems to like his own company. He comes into town every two or three weeks, stays just long enough to get his mail and load up his burro with provisions, and then he's off for the mountains again. He takes a trip to 'Frisco once or twice a year and when he comes back he usually has a lot of old books with him. Gets 'em to read when he's off prospecting, I reckon. Come to think of it, he'd just got back from the city the last time I seen him."

"How long ago was that?"

"About a week—ten days, mebbe."

"Have you any idea where I could find him?"

"Not the least in the world, friend. Were you wanting to see him about something particular?"

"Yes," said Hope, "I want to see him very much indeed."

"Then the best thing you can do, friend," the storekeeper asserted, "is to sit right down here in Santa Eulalia and wait for him."

The Kern county fair had opened its gates and the people of the country for half a hundred miles around were pouring into Bakersfield in motor cars, in wagons, and on horseback, by trolley and by train. As four o'clock drew near, the crowd deserted these attractions and slowly drifted toward the field where Bob Smith, "the Daredevil of the Sky," was advertised to give his hair-raising and perilous aeroplane exhibition.

As Smith, a slim, wirily built fellow, clad in the leather garments of an aviator, was crossing the field from the hangar to his waiting aeroplane, he was hailed by a tall young man who, accompanied by a fashionably dressed woman, had, with considerable difficulty, pushed his way through the crowd.

"Hello, Bob!" hailed the stranger, evidently an Easterner by his dress, "don't you remember me now that you've become famous?"

"By Jove," exclaimed the aviator, running forward with outstretched hand, "if it isn't Gerald Morton! What on earth are you doing here?"

"Oh, I'm spending a few days down the valley, near Santa Eulalia," Morton replied, a trifle evasively. "I have a little business there that requires my attention. Let me introduce you to my friend, the Countess Ivanoff."

"Mr. Smith," continued Morton, turning to Olga, "is responsible for my interest in aviation. He taught me to drive a machine when he had a school on Long Island, two years ago."

"I didn't know that you could drive an aeroplane," said Olga in surprise.

"You bet he can drive, countess," said Smith. "If he hadn't gone in business with that rich uncle of his he could have made a living as an aviator. He's one of the few amateurs I know that I'm not nervous about riding with. Don't you want to go up with me now, Morton? I've got a two-passenger tractor."

"Do I want to?" shouted Morton, as excited as a boy, "well, I should say I did. How about it, Olga? Do you mind waiting for me?"

"Not in the least," she answered. "Go, by all means. I'll wait for you in the car."

"Run over to the hangar, then," directed Smith, "and tell one of the boys to fix you up with a coat, and cap, and goggles. And be as quick as you can, Morton. It isn't good business for us professionals to let a crowd get too impatient."

Five minutes later, with Morton, goggled and leather-clad, seated beside him, Smith, signalling to his helpers that he was ready, threw on the power and the great propellers began to revolve, haltingly at first but rapidly gathering speed until their roar drowned out all other sounds. Smith threw over his starting-lever and the machine rolled forward across the turf, faster, faster, and then, in response to the depression of the planes, left the ground and soared, like a great white bird, into the air. For twenty minutes Smith performed his aerial maneuvers for the benefit of the multitude with strained necks and upturned faces a thousand feet below; then turned his machine in the direction of the mountains.

"Now," he shouted, putting his lips close to Morton's ear so that his words could be heard above the roar of the propellers, "the business part is over and we'll have a little pleasure spin."

Higher they climbed and higher, until the fair grounds and the city and the great plain of the San Joaquin lay spread below them like a map in bas-relief. Soon the plain below them merged into foothills and the foothills lost themselves in a wilderness of peaks and cliffs and canyons, and, almost before Morton realized it, they were hovering over the great San Bernardino range. Circling and swooping above the mountain tops like a gigantic hawk, Smith apparently found the spot for which he was looking, for he suddenly shut off the power and the machine began to volplane downward at appalling speed. So rapidly were they descending that it seemed as though the mountains were fairly leaping toward them. Morton, experienced aviator though he was, was frightened. "Something's happened to the engine," he thought. "We're in for a smash, for we can never make a landing on those mountains." Scarcely had the thought leaped through his mind when what had looked an instant before like a rocky and inhospitable mountainside resolved itself into a grass-covered mesa on which the machine landed as lightly as a bird.

3—"I Want You to Marry Me," Said Morton.

The mesa, or tableland, on which they stood apparently ended, a few hundred feet away, against a sheer wall of rock which rose skyward as abruptly as the side of a house. In the base of this cliff was a square, black hole, evidently the entrance to an abandoned mine, and near by stood a rudely built and dilapidated cabin. The cabin, he now saw, was built on a narrow shelf of rock; behind it rose the sheer cliff; before it was an abyss. It stood, indeed, on a veritable island in the air, and the only way to reach that island was by means of a wire cable which was stretched across the chasm. From this cable, red with rust, but apparently still strong, hung a sort of basket, roughly constructed, by means of which one could ferry himself across the river of space. "Great place for kidnapers or counterfeiters, eh? The police wouldn't find 'em here in a year of Sundays."

Morton had started toward the machine but, at Smith's remark, he turned and walked back to the edge of the chasm, where he stood staring at the cabin on the ledge, apparently lost in thought.

"The place seems to interest you," said Smith, laughing. "Thinking of opening up the mine?"

"No," said Morton thoughtfully, as he turned away, "but I have just thought of another way in which it might be made to pay."

"Bob," said Morton, as he and the aviator sat that evening at a table in a cafe, "what are you going to do after you have finished your engagement here?"

"I haven't any engagements ahead," Smith answered gloomily. "I'm thinking of taking a run east to see if I can't book a few dates."

"Going to take the machine with you?"

"No. Freight's too high and it's too much of a speculation. I'll leave it on the Coast until I get something."

"The trip you gave me this afternoon seems to have reawakened my enthusiasm for aviation," said Morton lightly. "I find that I shall have to stay around here for the next few weeks and I'd like to pass the time with something more exciting than golf. Why not rent me your machine? I'll assume all the risks and I'll pay you enough to make it worth your while. How about it?"

Morton and Olga fully realized that, as a result of their desperate but unsuccessful attempt to obtain possession of the book from Doctor Owen in the restaurant at Sandsboro, they had shown their hand and that, henceforth, they might as well play their game in the open. Recognizing that Hope and Cleo could have no object in continuing their search for the books had they discovered the lost formula in the one which Fitzmaurice had loaned to Doctor Owen, the two conspirators followed the naval officer and the girl to Santa Eulalia, where they learned, by a few inquiries, that Patten was prospecting in the mountains and that it was uncertain when he would return. As the hotel at which Hope and Cleo were staying was the only one in Santa Eulalia, Morton and Olga established themselves in the nearby town of Ellenville.

"It was that cabin on the ledge," he explained, "that gave me the idea. It's as remote and inaccessible as an island in the Arctic. Suppose we left the girl there for a week or two. I fancy she would then be willing enough to tell us anything she knows, eh? How does my plan strike you?"

"As far as it goes," said Olga, "it is admirable. You seem, however, to have overlooked one rather important detail. You tell me that this cabin is practically inaccessible. How do you propose, then, to get the girl to it?"

"By aeroplane," Morton exclaimed triumphantly.

On an afternoon early in the following week, Cleo, as had become her custom, was strolling along a quiet lane in the outskirts of Santa Eulalia. Today she was alone, however, for Hope had been called to Los Angeles on business, and Hook, seated on a cracker barrel, was entertaining the habitues of the general store with sea yarns. So completely absorbed in her thoughts was Cleo that she paid no attention to the large closed car, with drawn curtains, which rolled silently up behind her. Just as it came opposite her the door swung open, a man leaped out, a blanket was thrown over her head, muffling her screams, and she was dragged into the car, the whole performance being enacted in far less time than it takes to tell it. She struggled desperately to free herself from the enveloping folds, but unseen hands pinned her against the cushions while someone held a sponge, saturated with something that smelled sweet and sickly, over her nose and mouth. A few inhalations and her struggles ceased.

When Cleo recovered consciousness she found herself in a small and unkept room. Its walls, which were of unplaned boards, were covered with pictures cut from the illustrated papers; its furniture consisted of a small iron stove, much the worse for rust, an oilcloth-covered table, a chair, and the foul-smelling bunk on which she lay. In the chair with his back to her a man was sitting. She must have made some sound, for the man turned. It was Gerald Morton!

"So you're awake at last, my dear," he said, coming toward her. "How are you feeling?"

At sight of Morton she attempted to rise, but a wave of giddiness swept over her and she sank back upon the bunk.

"I feel ill," she moaned. "My head feels as though it were going to burst . . . where . . . where am I? . . . and what are you doing here, Mr. Morton? . . . have I had an accident? . . . has anything happened? . . . I can't remember."

"Nothing has happened—yet," said Morton coolly. "You're in a cabin in the mountains, my dear, and quite a lonely place it is, too."

"But how did I get here?" she asked, striving desperately to keep her composure.

"I brought you here," was the answer. "I wanted a quiet little talk with you where we would not be disturbed and this seemed just the place."

"I want you to marry me," said Morton, seating himself on the edge of the bed and attempting to draw her to him.

For an instant she gazed at him in mingled disbelief and anger, then sprang to her feet. The next instant he had taken her in his arms.

"And you're going to marry me, too, my beauty," he repeated, his breath hot upon her cheek, and he bent forward to kiss her, but, with a sudden movement, she wrenched herself free.

"Marry you?" she cried contemptuously. "Marry you, you cur, you cad? I wouldn't marry you if you were the last man left on earth!" and, as he again attempted to kiss her, she slapped him in the face.

"You little devil!" he snarled, livid with anger, "you'll kiss me now, and before I'm through with you you'll be glad to marry me," and he made as though to seize her, but, eluding his grasp, she reached the door, opened it, and fled with Morton at her heels. A hundred yards she ran blindly; then stopped abruptly, trembling with terror and excitement, for at her very feet a chasm yawned. But as her pursuer approached she turned defiantly.

"If you attempt to touch me, Mr. Morton," she said steadily, "I shall jump. I would rather be dead than have you lay a hand on me."

"Come, come, my dear," he said soothingly, as though he were talking to a frightened horse, "there's nothing to be frightened of. I'm not going to hurt you," and he cautiously advanced toward her a step or two.

"One step nearer," warned Cleo, in a strange, strained voice, "and I shall jump." And he knew that she would make good the threat.

"You need a chance to cool down and think things over," he said. "I suppose my proposal was a little sudden. So I'll just leave you here for a few days, my dear. You will find a basket of food on the table, and there will be no one to disturb you. It's a quiet, restful place—no one could find you here in a thousand years. Sure you won't change your mind and give me a kiss, my dear? No? Well, then, I'll be going. When I come back again I fancy that you'll be a little more cordial."

She saw him walk briskly along the edge of the cliff to a cable arrangement which, in her panic, she had failed to notice; saw him climb into a basket which was suspended from a pulley-wheel which ran upon the cable; saw him haul himself across the chasm by means of a rope, get out of the basket, detach it from the pully, and disappear with it behind the screen of bushes which lined the opposite cliff. A few minutes later she heard a sudden roar, as of a motor car with its muffler open, and before her astonished eyes an aeroplane soared skyward.

Having convinced herself that escape from the ledge was impossible save with assistance from outside, Cleo returned to the cabin, less worried than might have been expected, for she knew that Hope and Hook, once they discovered her absence, would move heaven and earth to find her. On the table was the basket of provisions brought by Morton. Continuing her investigations she discovered a cupboard which contained matches, candles, a bag of salt, some tins of fruit and vegetables, and a meal sack filled with what felt like books. Untying the string, she emptied the contents of the sack upon the floor—then gave a cry of astonishment and joy. For, amid the tattered dog-eared volumes, was one she recognized. It was a work on metallurgy—one of the dozen books which, since her earliest recollection, had stood on the shelf above her father's desk. She opened it with trembling fingers. Written in a firm, bold hand across the flyleaf was the name, "Richard Patten." By one of those coincidences which causes fiction to hang its head, Morton had brought her to the cabin of the very man for whom they were all searching. Now she recalled the storekeeper's description of Patten as Hope had repeated it to her: "A queer fellow . . . quiet . . . fond of books . . . has a cabin up in the mountains somewheres." And now, by a chance in a million, she had found Patten's cabin and the book. Slowly she turned the leaves, carefully scanning each in turn. But she found nothing. Disheartened, she was about to close the book, when, at the very foot of the last page, in letters so faint and minute as to be almost indistinguishable, she saw a line of writing. "Philosophy," it read, "p. 61, every seventh word." It was the key to the formula!

Three days dragged by—three days which, in that awful solitude, seemed like three years. The resources of the ledge Cleo soon exhausted; she cleaned the cabin; lighting a candle, she explored the abandoned mine working; she attempted to beguile the time reading the books which she had discovered in the sack, which proved, however, to be dry-as-dust scientific works; and every few hours she peered over the edge of the precipice in the faint hope that she might see someone in the canyon below. On the morning of the fourth day her patience was rewarded, for she saw two boys fishing in the mountain torrent which raced and roared along the bottom of the canyon. She called to them; again and again she screamed, but the distance and the noise of the river drowned her voice. Gathering a handful of pebbles, she stretched herself on the edge of the cliff and commenced to methodically bombard the boys below. A dozen pebbles she threw without attracting their attention, but at last, when she had almost abandoned hope, a pebble-struck one of them on the shoulder. Whirling about to see where it had come from, he saw Cleo on the ledge, half a thousand feet above. He called to his companion and they both stood staring up at her. Frantically she beckoned to them, but they shook their heads; it was evident that they knew of no path by which to reach the ledge. She tried to call to them, but it was impossible to make them hear. Suddenly a thought struck her. Running to the cabin, she looked wildly about for pencil and paper, but could find neither. On the table lay the book which contained the code. Tearing out the flyleaf she lighted match after match, let them burn for a moment, blew them out, and, using the blackened ends in lieu of a pencil, scrawled her brief call for help: "Held prisoner by Morton in cabin on ledge in mountains. Come quickly. Cleo." Folding the sheet, she addressed it to Jarvis Hope, Shaftsbury Hotel, Santa Eulalia. Now her problem was how to get the message to the boys below, for, should she let it flutter down, it would, in all probability, be carried away by a gust of wind, and, if she tied it to a stone, it might plunge into the river and be lost. All at once there came to her the recollection of an amusement of her childhood. With her handkerchief and a piece of string she made a miniature parachute, such as children use, weighted it with a small stone, and tied to the stone the message. Returning to the cliff, she first held up the parachute for the boys to see, then tossed it out into space. Almost instantly the handkerchief billowed out, thus checking its descent, and it sailed gently downward into the boy's upstretched hands. She could see them slowly deciphering the ill-written message, and then glance up at her again, whereupon she gestured frantically that they were to take it to the town. They quickly caught her meaning and, giving her a wave of encouragement, started down the canyon on a run.

Hope did not return from Los Angeles until the day following Cleo's disappearance. He was met at the railway station by Hook, who, almost beside himself with anxiety, told him the news. He wired to Los Angeles for detectives. Stirred by Cleo's youth and beauty and the mystery which enveloped her disappearance, posses of cowboys and citizens scoured the surrounding region, afoot and on horseback and in automobiles.

It was on a Monday afternoon that Cleo disappeared. Shortly before noon on Friday two panting boys, their dust-grimed faces streaked with rivulets of perspiration, burst into the hotel in Santa Eulalia.

"Say, mister," one of them demanded breathlessly of the clerk, "is there a feller named Jarvis Hope a-staying here?"

"There he is, over by the door," said the clerk.

"That's my name, son," said the officer. "What do you want of me?"

"I reckon this letter's fer you ,then," and the boy displayed the note from Cleo.

"It's from Cleo!" he exclaimed, turning to Hook, who was peering eagerly over his shoulder. "Thank God, she's alive! That hell-hound Morton has her a prisoner up in the mountains. In a cabin on a ledge, she says."

"Do you think you could show me the place where you saw her," Hope asked the boy.

"Sure. I been fishin' there a lot of times."

"Come along, then," cried Hope, and, followed by Hook, he fairly dragged the boy into his motor car. Throwing in his clutch, he jammed his foot on the accelerator and the car leaped forward toward the mountains.

So excited were Hope and Hook at the prospect of finding Cleo that neither of them noticed that another car was following them, nor, when the roughness of the country compelled them to leave their machine and proceed on foot, did they notice that the two men in the other car did likewise.

For two hours the boy led them along the winding course of the river until at last they reached the gloomy defile, with its perpendicular walls of rock, known as Dead Man's gulch.

"There's where I seen the lady—up there," said the boy, pointing to where, far above them, the sheer face of the cliff cut the sky.

"Come on, Hook," called Hope. "There must be a trail to the top somewhere if we can only find it." His clothes torn by thorns, his face and hands scratched and bleeding, the young officer pressed doggedly upward, splashing across mountain torrents, forcing his way through almost impenetrable walls of underbrush, scrambling over bowlders, leaping crevasses, skirting the edges of dizzy chasms, but working steadily upward, ever upward. At last, streaming with perspiration and staggering from exhaustion, he reached the mesa where Morton had landed in the aeroplane. A fewscore yards away he could see, above a line of bushes, a weather-beaten cabin, and, standing in the doorway—God be thanked!—was Cleo. They saw each other at almost the same instant. Running to the brink of the chasm which separated them, Hope tried to call across to her, but the distance was too great; she could not catch his words. But he saw her pointing to the cable. Hurrying to the end of it, he glanced about for the basket, but it was not to be seen. Rendered reckless by his love for Cleo, and taking no thought as to how he was to get back, he grasped with both hands the pulley-hook from which had hung the basket and swung himself off into space. He was half way across the appalling abyss when Cleo, who had been watching him in terrified fascination, uttered a piercing shriek of horror. Small wonder that she shrieked. She had seen a man emerge suddenly from the bushes which lined the opposite cliff—a man whose evil face she recognized. It was Mahlin! Frozen with horror, she saw him run toward the end of the cable from which Hope was dangling. She saw him swing an ax high above his head; she saw it whistle through the air and bite deep into the rusted cable; she saw the strands of wire part, one by one; she saw her lover's face turn pallid—and then she fainted.

"THE POWER OF THE PRESS" EDDYTORIUL

Tother day we met Ame Hillyer on the st one of our most respeckted cittizens & also our well knowd attorney, leggal lite, J. of the P. notary publick et cetery & Ame said it must be a turrible fine calling to be the edditor & prop of the flourishing noosepaper like the Bingville Boogle and be able to exert the power of the press as he might say & mold and sway publick opinyun and so forth too numerous to mentchion.

This cashual conversashion with Ame give us a idee for a subjeck for a eddytoriul "The Power of the Press" for this ishue so here goes.

As edditor & prop of the Bugle we can take our edditorial pen in one hand and place our other eddytoriul hand over our heart and truthfully say that we aint found the "Power of the Press" to be exactly all that its cracked up to be.

Its all right to talk about molding & swaying publick opinyun in Bingville but we have notised a good menny times to our regret & humiliashion that when we furnish in this collum free advice & eddytoriul opinyuns our subscribers reads same with great gusto—& then goes and does as they blamed please! At far as "The Power of the Press" in conneckshion with the Bugle is concerned there is times when we feel almost powerless.

If there was as much power in the press as is generally supposed there is then when we threaten and bulldoze and bullyrag deadbeat subscribers who are back on their subscripshions ennywheres from $10 to $15. you would nacherly think they would come humbly on their hands and knees to this offis and settle up wouldnt you? Well do they come humbly on their hands and knees? Gorrammit, no! At a matter of fackt they dont come a tall! On the corntrary instid of coming to us like men (or wimmen as the case may be) and paying us what they owe us. they git mad and stop their papers and run us down to other subscribers and vow theyll nevver pay us a ct as long as they live. Thats how much power of the press there is in the Bingville Bugle.

When folk pats us on the back and tells us how big & important & powerful we be and how we can mold publick opinyun like as if publick opinyun was made outen mud it makes us nauseated & sick to our stummick. What we need in our present financhial embaresment is is less compliments & more cash.

The only "Power of the Press" we know ennythink about is the elbow grease it takes to print the Bugle every wk on our rusty old broke down Warshington hand press.

Hoke Pizend

Hoke Peters is perfeckly misable these days. For quite a spell back Hoke's blood has been outen order so a few days ago he went out into the woods to dig some roots & yarbs with which to make some tea out of whitch he intended to take a swaller or two after each meal for a tonick as you might say.

Well Hoke he grubd around in the woods and found the root & yarbs he desired to make the concockshion from but the follering day afterward poor Hoke begin to break out all over with a irritashion of the skin and persooms that while he was diggin roots he got pizend by pizen ivy.

Hoke says he's kep so bizzy scratchin hisself whitch only makes it worse that he cant skeercely git time to do his chores and farm work and that he is 10 times worse off now being pizend than he was when merely his blood was outen order being as then it was one thing whereas now it's both. Hoke has the sympathy of the entire commoonitty in his afflickshion.

Silas Osgood, the well known horse swapper of Hardscrabble druv thru Bingville tother day jest about as fast as the horse could go. We dont know what Si's hurry was but we persoom he was scairt to stop for fear some of our cittizens would indooce him to swap horses agin.

Last time Si was in Bingville he swapped horses with Deacon Butterworth and the Deacon skun Si like everything. Then the time before that when Si was in town Enos McCracken got the best of him in a hoss dicker. We calkilate after two sitch experiences that Si considers that when he has occashion to pass thru our midst the safest plan is for him to do so as fast as his ole bay mare can run.

Lafe Peters says he met Si after he had past thru about a mile out of town and that he was walkin his horse whitch was all outen breth and in a lather.

Reckt the Clock

In the hall of Deacon Snodgrasses residence stands a old fashioned clock wlinch belongd to the Deacon's father before him and his father's father before him.

Every night the last thing afore the Deacon starts upstairs to bed he allus winds the clock and night before last was no excepshion to the rule. The Deacon and his wife Melissy had been reading in the setting room until the late hour of 9 p. m. It was quite a warmish evg. and the Deacon to be more comfortabler had took off his shoes and stockings and was in his bare feet.

Well Melissy had went on upstairs and whilst the Deacon was standin in the hall windin the clock yawnin his head off and haff asleep blamed if the cord on one of the clock weights weighing about 11 lbs. diddent break and the weight fell on one of the Deacon's bare feet smashing two toes.

The Deacon was wide awake in a instant. With a shreck of pain that could be heerd by all the nabers he grabd the injured foot in both hands and hopd around on tother foot moaning and groaning like everythink. When the Deacon realized that it was the clock whitch had crippeld him he lost his temper and before he thort what he was a doing he give the clock a vichious push and it fell smashing all to splinters & busting its inside works beyond huming recognishion as we might say.

Several of the nabers rusht over to the Deacon's to see if the house was on fire and they said that from the langwidge whitch the Deacon used you wouldn't nevver suspeckt him of being one of the stanchest pillers of the Bingville church, far from it.

Nice wether as we write this. However, there's no telling what kind of wether it will be when you read this. You never can tell what several days will bring forth.

Amos Hillyer our brillyunt loryer says he expecks to conduck a lawsuit next wk. if he has good luck betwixt Eb Winters and Enos Mills who lives nabers to each other. Ame has been trying to indooce em to go to law aginst each other about a line fence.

Cy Hoskins has been talking lately about painting his buggy and has went so far as to inquire of Hen Weathersby what the paint would cost. It wouldent be a bad idee for Cy to paint his buggy being as it aint been painted for 11 yrs. to our nolledge.

A stranger whose name we did not lern past thru our midst last wk. This is several times this humiliating thing has happend to us lately. If strangers passing thru our midst would kindly stop and leave their names and state their business at our office they would confer a great favor.

Mrs. Lem Brown says her hens aint laying quite as proliffick as they was a spell ago. Well, Mrs. Lem you can't expeckt your hens to lay at top speed all the time. Sometimes we think folks expects too much from their hens.

Jaspar Hawkins brung five doz. fresh eggs to Hen Weathersby's store last wk. and traded em out in groceries & other necessities of life. Jasps's hens seems to be doing well by him.

Bill Hepburn our artistick blacksmith made his ushual trip to the co. seat last Satterday and of course everybuddy expeckted him to come home under the weather as ushual. It was therefor a awful surprise & amazement when Bill arrove back in Bingville early in the afternoon sober as a judge and cross as a bear. It seems that Bill left his wallet in his other pants pocket when he shifted before leaving for the co. seat and diddent have a ct. to spend in liquor refreshment. Bill says he'll make up for it next Satterday or know the reason why.

Harve Hines our barber & tonsorial artist tells us that work in his line has begin to slack up being as them as had their hair cut when the wether 1st begin to warm up aint been back sinst and may not return until next spring. As for shaves Harve says its simply disgustin how men in Bingville shaves theirselfs.

Rev. Moore our beloved paster of the Bingville church will preach next Sabbath morning from the follering text: "It is More Blessed to Give Than to Receive." We persoom this is a mild hint to the congregashion who are back moren $200 on the paster's back salery.

Seth Dewberry our lion hearted town constubble is wearing a new badge whitch Bill Hepburn our artistick blacksmith made for him out of galvanized iron. It is a bout six inches acrost and is shaped like a star. Seth says his old badge wassent big enuff, but when his new one is shined up bright it can be saw on him nearly haff a mile away.

Wes Woodruff our expert hunter & trapper went fishing over to Gootchic Pond last Sunday and brung home a eel about five ft. long whitch he ketched on a hook & line by axident. Wesses wife cookd the eel and Wes et it. He says it tasted jest like fish. Personally we would jest as leef eat a snake as a eel & would haft to be turrible hungry to ete either one.

These is about all the "Personals & Lokals Mixt" whitch we can think of at this writing. Others may ockur to us later and if they are of suffishent importance we will publish them elsewhere in the Bugle. Look out for em!

Sally Stung

Last Sunday Miss Sally Hoskins our famous Bingville poet writer whose pomes apear from time to time in the Bugle & even in the co. seat papers took a walk into the woods back of Bingville last Sunday where she could indulge in beautiful thorts and commune with Nachure.

Miss Sally set down under a oak tree in a mossy dell and whilst she was engaged in communing she suddently discuvverd that she had inadvertently set down on a ground yallerjacket's nest! Sally run all the way home whitch is nearly a mile as fast as she could and arrived all outen breth but in spite of the good time she made she thinks she was stung praps six or eight times en route. Sally left her bonnet at the scene of the disaster and aint been back for it yet.

Sossiety news are very skeerce in our midst this wk. and as a result we have nothink espeshial to make mentchion of. We are now jest betwixt hay and grass as you might say as far as Bingville sossiety is concernd—the gayeties of the winter soshial whirl is over and the summer picknicks aint begind yet in ernest but will soon. When they do look out for a large amount of sossiety news.

A Failure

Miss Amelia Tucker our raining sossiety queen had a pale pink dress that Miss Tabitha Underwood our fashionable dressmaker said she could dye beautiful blue for Amelia if she so desired.

Amelia asked Tabitha as a favor to say nothing about dying the pink dress blue and then folks would think she had purchased a new dress and what the publick diddent know wouldnt hurt em so Tabitha promist.

Well to make a long story short Tabitha tride to dye the dress but the dyes diddent work right or somethink and as a result the dress is several different colors and looks ridicklus in the extream. Amelia got awful mad at Tabitha for spiling her dress whitch she says she wouldent be saw even on a dark night in. Then Tabitha got mad and up and told the whole thing and now the cat is outen the bag. The wimmen folks of Bingville saye they are surprised to learn that Amelia Tucker would wear a dyed dress and try to pam it off as a new one.

The Widow Skinner has went into the garden marketing bizness. The Widow has a fine garden this yr. and is raising more truck than she can use. So a wk. ago Satterday she driv to the co. seat in her buckboard with quite a mess of garden sass sitch as unions, lettuce, reddishes et cetery and peddled it out from house to house at a considerable profit.

The Widow says she is going to make two trips a wk. with garden truck hereafter as long as her garden lasts. Mrs. Skinner is quite a bizness woman in spite of her sex.

Hank Indisposed

Hank Dewberry who was to of went to work last wk. for Cy Hoskins doing some work on Cy's lower farm did not do so.

While shutting his jackknife after cutting off a chew of tobacco from his plug down to Hen Weathersby's store tother evg. Hank axidentally cut a gash in his thum. Hank says soon as this wound starts to heel he has to go and knock it agin some fool thing or other and busts it open agin and he calkilates unless he goes to bed it wont be able to do a lick of work all summer. Besides Hank says he's a leetle mite scairt to work in sitch awful hot wether being as he's afeard of sunstroke with whitch he has been threatened several times in the past.

I Teem & Hawl

For several yrs I have only had 1 horse, but last wk I purchased one more addishional horse whitch makes two. Now with two horses on my hands I am in a posishion to do teeming & hawling.

How are you off for teeming & hawling? If you have enny work in this line I am the party for you. It aint everybuddy who happens to own two horses and a big road wagon like I do, and yet now and then they desire to have somethink teemed or hawled. Righ there's where I come in handy.

I don't care a tarnashion what I teem or hawl so long as I get a reasonable price per load for the same. It's all the same to me whether it's stone, or lumber, merchandise or household goods, bricks or hay. Of course I could hawl a bigger load of hay than I could of bricks, but the price would be the same.

Hen Weathersby has engaged me to teem & hawl all his goods from the co. seat to his store. I teemd & hawled my 1st load for Hen last wk and cheerfully refer you to him. All I lost offen the waggin was a box of prunes.

If you aint got no teem of your own give me a chanst to do your teeming & hawling and thus make a honest living for myself & my fambily.

Made an Address.

In an address at Indianapolis Friday Mr. Lathrope placed before the Chamber of Commerce the advantages of city planning and the purposes of the proposed display. The matter of bringing the exhibit to Indianapolis will probably be taken up by the executive committee of the Indianapolis commerce chamber.

Great Interest Shown.

"In cities where Mr. Lathrope has taken the exhibit great interest has been manifested, he explained, and much progress has been made in the co-ordination of the best municipal forces for the common good.

"Mr. Lathrope said city planning embraces a large scope of the activities of a city, such as the transportation interests, the mercantile, manufacturing and industrial enterprises generally, real estate, social service movements, housing, the juvenile court, commercial organizations, and many other movements. It is his plan, he said, to bring these forces together in cities where he starts his campaign.

Advantages of Planning.

"The exhibit consists of photographs, drawings, maps, descriptions of plans and many other things which give those interested a comprehensive understanding of the advantages of city planning as a science which benefits the people financially and every other way.

"At the chamber Thursday, Mr. Lathrope addressed a group of business men from the chamber, the board of trade, the Indianapolis real estate board and the park board."

NAVAL BUILDING PLAN FIGHT ON IN SENATE

Washington, D. C., July 15.—Fight over the building program of the naval bill began in the senate today. This section provides for eight capital ships in 1917 instead of the house's five, and contemplates completion of the navy general board's five-year building program within three years. Debate was expected to last several days.

Senator Norris was on his feet late yesterday to open an attack on the building plan, but leaders agreed to postpone discussion until today because of the small number of senators present.

Senate democrats will caucus tonight to decide whether the legislative program drawn up recently shall be extended at the cost of lengthening the present session of congress beyond September. Many democrats are insistent that special measures be added to the program agreed on but leaders realize this means a session lasting into the fall.

Democrats and republicans still are apart on what measures are to be disposed of. Earlier in the week at a joint conference republicans consented to consideration of appropriation, revenue, shipping and corrupt practice measures, but democratic champions of many measures are demanding now that this program be enlarged.

New York, July 15.—Fifty-two thousand national guardsmen from the department of the east are now at the Mexican border or approaching the border, Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood announced today. Of these, New York state has contributed 16,178. Pennsylvania is second with 12,779.

Michigan City, Ind., July 15.—About fifty passengers on the Wolverine flyer westbound on the Michigan Central, had narrow escapes yesterday afternoon when the last two coaches of the train, both sleeping cars, jumped the track in the yards here. One of the cars turned over. Its steel construction probably saving many lives.

The front trucks of the last coach split a switch and ran upon a siding, dragging the forward car across the main track. After the coupling broke the rear car ran along the ties of the siding for 200 feet until it buried its trucks in the ground and stopped in an upright position.

The forward coach tore up the main track for about 300 feet more and turned over, crushing part of its roof against a box car. The crash with the box car resulted in a rent in the roof of the coach, which permitted the imprisoned passengers to walk out.

All the passengers were removed to the forward coaches of the train and continued on their journey a few minutes later. Several had slight cuts from broken glass. The most severe injury was received by Mrs. W. I. Lamb, of Gibson City, Ill. She had a severe gash in an arm, but refused to go to a hospital. She received surgical attention on the train. The clothing of F. F. Duval, of Memphis, Tenn., was ripped to tatters, but his injuries were minor scratches and bruised. Lives were saved probably because the coach was of steel.

GEN. LAWTON'S SON WOULD REJOIN ARMY

Washington, July 15.—An unusual situation has been created in army circles over the effort to get back in the service Manley Lawton, the son of the famous General Lawton, of Fort Wayne, who died when leading his troops in the Philippines.

Manley Lawton, who served through much of the Philippine campaign with his father as a member of the Philippine scouts, retired from the army because of poor health about three years ago. He since has regained his health and desires to get back in the service.

Vice President Marshall and Senator Taggart have become interested in the case, and, in trying to get Lawton back in the service, have run up against a statutory limitation which would keep Lawton out. He is twenty-nine years old, while the law does not permit any one to enter the army as a second lieutenant who is above the age of twenty-seven.

Army officers and officials of the war department are anxious to do everything they can for Lawton, but it seems as if they will have to get a special act of the congress to enable him to be taken back into the service. In case all other expedients fail, Senator Taggart is prepared to introduce a bill to this effect.

Many counties in this section of the state are building many miles of improved roads, according to J. Herman Bueter, manager of the bond department of the German-American National bank. At Portland the treasurer of Jay county will on July 25 sell an issue of $19,000 worth of bonds. Other counties report the following: Columbia City, Whitley county, $3,918 worth of stone road bonds, 4½ per cent; Plymouth Marshall county, $15,700, $12,000 and $6,200, 4½ per cent, ten years; Warsaw, Kosciusko county, $16,980, 4½ per cent, ten years; Angola, Steuben county, $9,940, 4½ per cent, fifteen years.

WARNING TO HOTELS AND BOARDING HOUSES

New York, July 15.—Hotel and boardinghouse keepers all over the state were notified today by local health officers that they would be expected to do their part in preventing the spread of infantile paralysis. The local health authorities acted under instructions from Dr. Hermann M. Biggs, state commissioner of health who was led to send out a new circular of information owing to the fact that thousands of families have left New York for the rural districts to safeguard the health of their children.

Proprietors of hotels and boarding houses will be required to notify health officers of the arrival of any children from infected districts. Those who fail to do so, Dr. Biggs said, would be held responsible for any unfavorable developments. The state health department also urged local health officers to see that glasses, dishes, spoons, and other utensils used in eating and drinking in public places are thoroughly scalded or otherwise disinfected after use. This rule has been enforced already in New York city. The instructions apply particularly to soda fountains.

Physicians fighting the plague here were encouraged today by cooler weather, also by the fact that there has been a slight decrease in the number of offenders arrested for violating the sanitary ordinances. The police report that janitors and caretakers are co-operating with them to enforce the law.

It is possible that work on raising 3,100 feet of track of the Fort Wayne and Northwestern Traction company through the town of Huntertown will be started this fall, according to announcement made by William C. Schwier, county commissioner. When work starts will depend to some extent on the available labor.

The county commissioners conferred with Philip A. Holman, engineer for the traction company, Friday afternoon at Huntertown, and approved measurements for the raising of the tracks of the company from 2 to 6 1-3 inches. By raising the tracks to that level they will conform to a grade of the stone road which the county commissioners will build in two years. Mr. Schwier said. The tracks of the traction company have been down since 1905 and recent rains have made work of highway superintendents in Huntertown on the road over which the tracks pass difficult.

The traction company's engineer will now prepare a profile of the work to be done, which will come up for the approval of the county commissioners.

Charleston, W. Va., July 15.—Orders have been received to recruit the second West Virginia infantry to full war strength. The regiment now has 892 men mustered into federal service and 1,042 more are needed. The first infantry will disband. Two-thirds of its 800 men will be transferred to the Second regiment and the balance will form the skeletons of new artillery and cavalry units of which the state now has none. Many families of men in the second infantry now in camp are in destitute circumstances. Aid has been promised but has failed to materialize. Col. Morrison announces that unless dependents are promptly provided for he will approve the discharge of all married men. There are a large number.

PONIES ARE OFF AT CHICAGO ONCE MORE

Chicago, July 15.—Horse racing was revived in Chicago today after an interim of twelve years. At Hawthorne track a ten-day meeting was opened, the feature event today being the derby, worth $10,000. The last race meeting held here was in 1904, when High Ball won the American derby at Washington park. According to officials of the Illinois Jockey club, under whose management the meeting is held, the advance sale shows that a big crowd will be at the course when the first race is called at 2:30 this afternoon.

Four three-year-olds are entered for the derby, the John Sanford entry, George Smith, winner of the Kentucky derby, having been withdrawn on telegraphic orders, from the owner, because of soreness developed in a recent workout. Dick Williams, the Schorr entry, did not arrive. The entries in the derby, one and a quarter miles, for which there is a purse of $10,000, $7,000 to first, $1,750 to second, $750 to third, and $500 to fourth, are as follows:

Churchill, 119, F. Keogh; F. P. Keene.

HARRISON HILL REACHED QUICKLY FROM DOWNTOWN

Because of the fact that the distance from the court house to Harrison Hill, the new addition located in the angle formed by Calhoun street and Rudisill boulevard, can be covered in one straight line of travel as a bird flies, this tract can be reached much more quickly than many other residential sections which may be somewhat nearer the business district if the distance were measured in a straight line. Upon realizing the truth of this fact many people wonder why Harrison Hill was not platted years ago, and it does seem remarkable that real estate men have overlooked this feature which is helping to contribute to the number of purchasers of lots in this addition. Full details regarding Harrison Hill may be secured from Hilgemann and Schaaf, North American building.

IT WILL RANK AMONG BIG TENNIS BATTLES

Utica, N. Y., July 15.—The meeting of Ichiya Kumage, the Oriental champion, and Clarence J. Griffin, of San Francisco in the final round of the New York state lawn tennis championship today takes a front rank among the great tennis battles of the season. The Japanese player, on account of his steady improvement since coming to the United States, and his splendid showing in the present tournament is now regarded as one of the most dangerous opponents in the country. If he wins the championship here no one is willing to predict where his career will end. Kumage and Griffin met last winter in Manila for the championship of the Orient and the Japanese took the title after five hard sets. He also defeated Griffin in an exhibition match at Tokio.

CHICAGO GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

Chicago, July 15.—Sultry moist weather in the northwest likely to increase danger from black rust, tended to cause an advance today in the wheat market here. Opening prices, which ranged from ⅜c off to a like advance, with July at $1.08⅞ and September at $1.09⅞, were followed by a material upturn all around.

THE DAY ON WALL STREET.

New York, July 15.—Additional liquidation of specialties accounted for the uncertain condition of today's narrow and profesional market after an initial period of strength. Tennessee Copper was the weak feature, falling three points to its lowest prices in two years and causing reactions of a point or thereabouts in other speculative issues. These losses were largely retrieved later. U. S. Steel was firm. Bethlehem lost almost ten points and rails were firm, when not making actual gains. Shipping shares and Mexicans were passive, and Sears-Roebuck featured the specialties of its class with a gain of five points. The closing was irregular. Bonds were steady.

Gains were far outnumbered by declines at the opening of today's moderate operations, specialties, particularly motors equipments and shipping shares, evincing a tendency to make further recoveries. United Fruit scored the most substantial advance, rising over two points, with a point or more for Maxwell's, Studebaker, American Locomotive, Tennessee Copper, United States Rubber and Butte-Superior. Rails, Pennsylvania excepted, were fractionally higher, with U. S. Steel, Westinghouse and Pittsburg Coal. Dealings indicated the usual active demand.

WORKS THROUGH SUMMER.

To interest boys and girls, having finished the eighth grade and who do not contemplate entrance to high school, Walter E. Gordan, director of the Fort Wayne vocational school, is remaining in the city this summer and furnishing all information desired by those pupils who might wish to attend the vocational school.

In a pamphlet printed by the school fifty of the leading occupations of men of Fort Wayne are set forth. Classes for machinists, who can obtain instruction in the vocational school that they could not expect to get in any other place, are a dominant feature of the studies offered. The school fits the need of more training in the occupations to which the masses are drawn.

BABY BONDS INSURE AGAINST WANT

A local business man recently stated that regardless of the manner in which he might switch around his investment in other securities in the future, that he would always retain his accumulation of Baby Bonds as he regarded them as a provision against any periods of stress which he might incur in later years. Baby Bonds come in $10 denominations, bear six per cent interest and are secured by local real estate. There are also a few larger bonds of the same issue in $500 denominations with the same security and rate of interest. Full details may be secured from the Wildwood Sales company, Shoaff building.

Appreciate the Modern City Planning In LAFAYETTE PLACE

Remember that there is nothing else quite as extensive in the way of modern city planning on the records in Allen County Court House.

To fully appreciate this feature of Lafayette Place it is necessary to look over the addition itself.

Take a plat of the addition with you when you look it over and compare the two. Then, and then only will you realize how much Lafayette Place means to Fort Wayne.
